Students from Socorro ISD's 33 campuses, 250 student performers in band, orchestra and choir, plus faculty, administrators, board members and guests will dedicate the district's Freedom Flag Memorial on Sept. 10. The memorial includes a 100-foot flagpole and 20-foot-by-38-foot, garrison-sized flag. The ceremony will honor past, present and future defenders of freedom as well as first responders, survivors and victims of the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. First responders who gave the ultimate sacrifice during the September 11 tragedy will be among those honored during ceremonies at Robert Rojas Elementary, 500 Bauman Rd., on Thursday, Sept. 9 at 8:30 a.m. Students have been studying the events of three years ago and the impact it has had on the nation. UPPER VALLEY — Canutillo Independent School District's Ballet Folklorico program is providing individuals of all ages with the opportunity to learn new dances and costume making.

The Grupo Folklorico Cuauhtli, an organization made up of students and community members from Canutillo and the El Paso area, participated in dance workshops this summer that focused on the cultural richness of this region's Mexican heritage.

During the workshops, the Cuauhtli Folklorico members learned fourteen new dances from various provinces of Mexico and how to make the different dance costumes. Instructor for the workshop sessions was Ambrosio Hernandez, who directs the Folklorico Mexica dance troupe of Tucson, Arizona.

Hernandez is a member of the Mexican Folklorico Teachers' Association of Mexico City. He and his assistant, Norma Sotomayor, travel throughout Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico to present dance workshops for high school and community folklorico programs.

"During a workshop, I usually don't teach more than three dances, but this group was different; as the hours passed they kept learning, so I kept teaching," Hernandez said.

SISD teacher honored

El Paso State Sen. Eliot Shapleigh surprised Montwood High School Student Activities Director Laura Price with the first Adelante Con Ganas award Sept. 2. "In my Senate office, this is the highest award we can give, and you deserve it," Shapleigh said, citing her community involvement and that of her students as the reason she is the first recipient of the award. SISD Superintendent Dr. Robert J. Durón said she is an outstanding role model for SISD students. "I hear about you constantly," he added, "and we're all really blessed to be around Mrs. Price. And Senator, we appreciate your love for the District and your recognition of Mrs. Price." She has been student activities director for the high school for 14 years and is responsible for student council activities and student clubs, plans the annual homecoming and Light Up the Night celebrations and other major school events. The school's enrollment now tops 3,000 students, and the schools' projects during the past year have included painting Paisano Drive's Rescue Mission and the collection of personal hygiene items for Fort Bliss soldiers returning from deployment.

County welcomes budget-related public comment on website

EL PASO COUNTY — El Paso County Commissioners Court wants comments from the community on its budgetary efforts for fiscal year 2004/2005. An On-line Public Forum has been installed on the County's web page specifically for that purpose.

To voice their opinion, all El Paso County residents have to do is access the County's web page and link on to the "It's Budget Time, Speak Out!" site on the right, said Ray Sanchez, the County's web master. Entries can be posed as questions to individual members of Commissioners Court, to the auditor or any other department head, or they can simply be commentary on current issues. Participants can submit their questions or comments anonymously.

"The forum is designed to receive commentary and to respond to any question," Sanchez said. "The responses can be either from the public or from a member of the court, depending on the request. Either way, it is a means for the public to voice their opinion on the County's budget, which is the issue of the moment, or on any other County-related subject."

The El Paso County's web page can be accessed at epcounty.com.

One perspective

Yes, fear

We see these two words everywhere: No fear. It is the motto of a generation that has known neither oppression nor want.

The sentiment is emblazoned on clothing, automobiles, jewelry, the notebooks our kids carry to school. There's even a Jeff Foxworthy version for rednecks that says "Ain't skeered."

Unfortunately, it isn't meant as encouragement for the average person to put aside anxious thought and useless worry and live a more happy and contented life, to enjoy the multitude of blessings we enjoy as Americans.

No way.

No fear, as we know it, is a call to rebellion, the battle cry of rejection of authority and regulation, the dismissal of the need to conform to basic societal requirements. It's an updated, edgy interpretation of what earlier generations called "doing your own thing."

It challenges each individual to do their own thing without fear of the consequences.

Mr. Webster's definition of fear comes in three basic parts. Loosely interpreted they are: 1) the heart pounding, terrifying sensation you get when you know you are most definitely in harm's way; 2) anxious concern about things you can't control; and 3) simple and profound respect and/or reverence for powers bigger and badder than you.

Since the no fear philosophy doesn't care diddly about anxious worry, it must be addressing either the first or the third definition of fear, and in that case, you can't help but conclude that rejection of these kinds of fear is nothing short of lunacy.

What? You mean surrender to a thought process that might keep us from being all we can be, an Army of One who is true to none, looks only after self and risks life and limb engaging in all sorts of dangerous behavior just to prove to ourselves — and probably other people, like parents and peers — that no price is too high to pay to not grow up?

I would submit that fear is another of the healthier emotions our young people are failing to develop. I think we need to start a counter-campaign that says: "Yes, fear."

We're unlikely to do that, though, because it would take too much effort, too much explanation. Corporate sponsors aren't interested in ideas that take much time or attention to detail. That doesn't sell well to folks with short attention spans like ours.

But I wonder what it would take to sell these concepts:

Yes, fear the might and power of the automobile, tons of metal traveling at high rates of speed, capable of incredible destruction if we get careless for just a second. Yes, learn to drive, use it for good — just understand this isn't a toy.

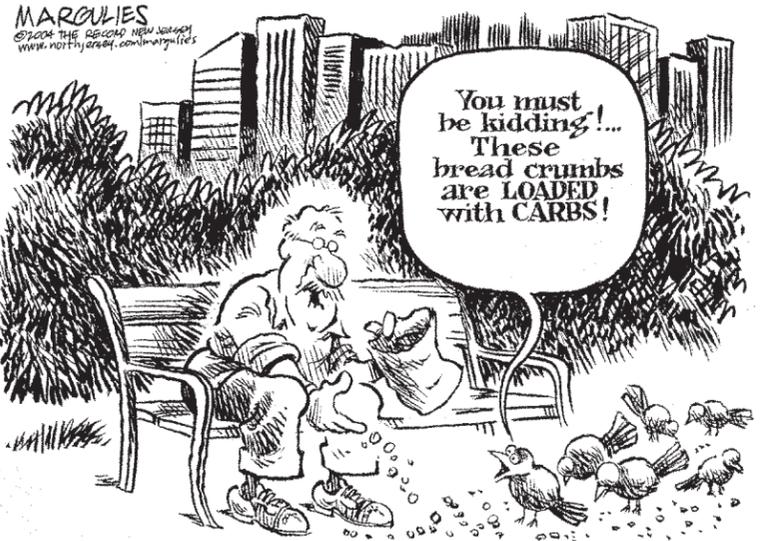

Yes, fear the power of emotions that rise up inside your body as a result of your hormones. Understand that just as these urges can be a powerful force for good, they are equally a force for destruction and misery if you don't control them. And just like a car crash, it is unlikely that you will be the only one to get hurt. There are thousands of babies killed everyday because someone didn't fear the consequence of following their animal instincts — and thousands more are born, into sorrow.

Yes, fear the police officer with his gun and his authority. Fear the consequence of breaking the law. Be aware of the time, money and effort that will be required to work your way back out of a crime — and sometimes you can't resolve what you did. Consider these resources that will be uselessly squandered because it doesn't have to happen at all if you have a little respect for the force and power the law of the land holds over you. Instead of listening to some rapster tell you to kill a cop and beat up a woman, listen to a recording of I Fought the Law and the Law Won.

Yes, fear the consequences of allowing your God-given power to think and make choices to be influenced by drugs and alcohol. Fear what can happen when you are not

Axing the Fabens Library is not the way to balance the county budget

It's so sad to realize that the public library in Fabens will be shut down due to the budget crunch facing El Paso County. We all realize that in these tough economic times we must make sacrifices. But to take away something that is so vital to our people's future, something that will help our children forge a stronger, more solid educational base, well, what can I say? It's a tragedy.

Although Commissioners Court and the County Judge have tried to find other ways to balance their budget, a $20 million shortfall looks like a done deal. In other words, eliminating the library and other positive programs that are meant to help people are going to suffer the budget axe come the new year.

What concerns me the most is this: Where are our children going to go to continue their reading after school, to finish a class assignment? Where are they going to go when they need to use a computer to do research? The library is one of the few places where working families can get access to the internet.

Do our County Commissioners think that every person in Fabens, Tornillo, San Elizario, or Clint already has access to the internet? Many families in rural areas don't — and DSL lines don't reach our far-flung communities. Even cable television doesn't reach this far!

Some people might say they can always go to the main library in El Paso, or even another library that's closest to them. But what about transportation? Are the Commissioners going to improve our transportation service so that people can make that lengthy trek? I don't think so. Not with the budget that's currently being promoted.

Yes, these are tough economic times, and tough times call for tough measures. But, isn't there something else that can be cut? Isn't there some obscure program out there that can be cut? The budget axe will cut the library to save $250,000. But, that's a mere pittance when compared to the millions that the County has designated for its next year budget.

Besides, doesn't the County have a surplus? I understand that they do have millions of dollars in reserve. So, why must the library be cut? Rural areas, especially, need to be able to access books, information, research, computer time, and many other elements offered by these wonderful institutions of higher learning.

A library is the life-blood of a community. As a long-time educator, I have grown to love libraries. They helped me out when I was a youngster, on my road to higher education. Without the library I doubt that I could've become a superintendent for a large school district in El Paso. I doubt that I would've been able to pass all my college courses. The library was my salvation, and I relied on the many wonders it contained to keep me focused on my quest to become a better person. What's to become of our children now?

Where can our children go to access children's books? Where can our monolingual Spanish-speakers go now to find books in their language of choice? Our elderly can't travel long distances to access literary services. So, what's next on the horizon?

I know what the County Commissioners and the County Judge are going through, but a balanced budget should not come at the expense of the learning process. Surely there is money out there to save our most precious resource. Come on, County leaders, help save our library.

Reyes Reports By U.S. Rep. Silvestre Reyes

Reflecting on September 11

This Saturday, citizens across the country will pause to reflect upon the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. It is hard to believe three years have passed since that fateful day. Like the attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941 and the D-Day invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944, Sept. 11, 2001 was a turning point in our history and will forever remain part of our national consciousness.

Our lives were changed forever by those horrific events. Rather than paralyzing our government and weakening our resolve, our nation responded with strength and purpose. In the three years since the attacks, we have been working as a nation not only to find meaning in such a tragedy, but to protect our country against further attack.

As you know, firefighters, police officers and medical personnel responded heroically to the attacks. In the days and weeks following, volunteers from across the country arrived to assist in the heart-wrenching and dangerous duty of clearing the debris in search of victims or survivors.

Congress acted quickly, providing $40 billion in emergency funds for our heroic first responders and for military purposes. We authorized the use of force against those responsible for the terrorist attacks. We created the Department of Homeland Security to consolidate our law enforcement agencies under one roof. I met with first responders and leaders in El Paso to ensure that the unique needs of the border region were well-represented in this new agency. I advocated — and continue to advocate — for increased federal funding to assist law enforcement personnel in the border region.

Congress is also working to protect our country from further attack by improving our intelligence gathering capabilities. As a member of the House Intelligence Committee, I have focused on this topic for years. My Democratic colleagues and I on the Intelligence Committee introduced major legislation in April of this year that creates a Director of National Intelligence with full budget authority and breaks down the "stove pipes" between intelligence agencies to ensure that crucial information does not fall through the cracks. Our legislation is quite similar to the recently released 9/11 Commission Report and I will work enact these changes in a timely manner.

For the victims and heroes of Sept. 11, the first responders working hard in El Paso and across the country, and for our nation as a whole, we are working hard and will pause this Saturday, the third anniversary of Sept. 11. We honor your efforts and your memories — and we will never forget.

Eye on D.C. By U.S. Rep. Henry Bonilla

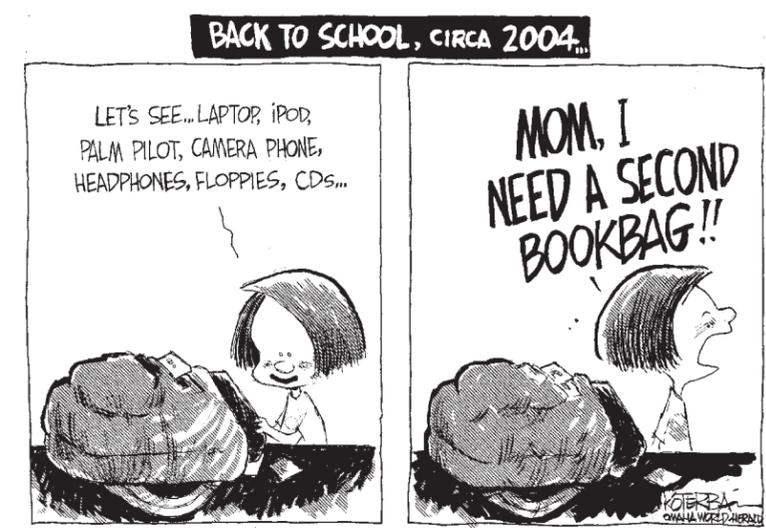

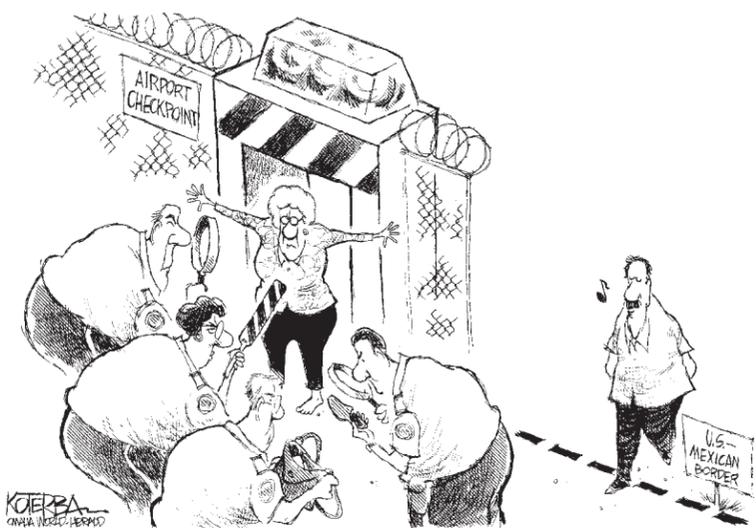

September 11 remembered

It's hard to believe three years have passed since the attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon. We will all remember where we were that morning. Whether you were near ground zero or in Castroville, Texas we all had the same fears racing through our heads. What was happening? Who was behind it? Would my city be next? We prayed together, we stood together side by side, not as Republicans or Democrats, but as Americans ready to do what was necessary to get through this crisis. People across the country asked what they could do help. Phone calls poured into New York, Washington and Pennsylvania with offers to help and send money. America was facing it's ultimate modern day challenge and meeting it. In the following days, we committed ourselves to doing whatever it took to respond. The President focused like a laser beam on the effort to eliminate those on the other side of the world who were responsible. This tragedy showed our nation how strong we are. Our nation's leaders told us to go on with our lives and we did. We resumed our regular schedules as best we could... tending to our children, shopping, going to football games... and becoming reacquainted with our friends and family to once again understand what's really important.

Here in Washington there are many of us who remain focused on the fundamentals that preserve our way of life. Strengthening our military, our intelligence operations our federal agencies that watch our ports of entry for killers trying to enter our country. In the days since Sept. 11, 2001 we have created a Department of Homeland Security to ensure that all of our agencies... the FBI, Customs, the Border Patrol, the DEA... operate in synch. This year alone we funded billions of dollars to strengthen our homeland. This funding will assist firefighters, emergency management and law enforcement officials. It will also implement passenger and baggage screening, highway and air security, and training, as well as modernizing our nation's borders. Our nation has made great strides since Sept. 11, 2001. On this important date, I encourage everyone to remember the past so as to make us stronger in the future. We will never forget Sept. 11. Today we should feel proud that this generation, like those past, is every bit as committed to doing whatever it takes to preserve freedom, justice and the American Way.

in control, when something else is driving your body, making your decisions, talking with your mouth, using up your life. If you give that power over to mind-altering substances, it sure won't be you doing the deeds but it is guaranteed to be you who pays the price.

Wisdom isn't one of the big selling words these days, but I wish we could somehow successfully market the concept that people who have wisdom are those who are sought out in times of distress and decision, are those who can truly make a difference in the lives of others while living their own lives well, are people who can lead a family or a nation.

That kind of wisdom begins with a healthy measure of fear.

Transportation funding will improve access to jobs, education for low-income residents

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Department of Transportation (DOT) has awarded $497,668 to the City of El Paso for Sun Metro's Job Access Reverse Commute (JARC) program. Congressman Silvestre Reyes secured $247,668 through the congressional appropriations process and the City of El Paso secured $250,000 through DOT's competitive grant program.

Sun Metro's JARC program, known as the Job Express Plan, helps homeless and low-income El Pasoans obtain employment by providing transportation to and from jobs, vocational and education training. Sun Metro will use this funding for operating assistance, scheduling purposes and administrative costs.

"Those without access to transportation in El Paso face serious challenges in seeking employment and successfully performing their jobs," said Reyes. "By providing individuals with the mobility they need to gain access to education and employment, Sun Metro and the federal JARC program are not only improving the well-being of El Pasoans, but strengthening El Paso's overall economy," said Reyes.

Margarita Armendariz, the Cuauhtli Group has also had the opportunity to attend dance workshops in Los Angeles, California, as well as in El Paso.

"Because of the members' attitude and willingness to learn while participating in after school and weekend activities, the group's accomplishments and tremendous efforts are now recognized in the community of Canutillo," Armendariz stated.

The members of Cuauhtli have demonstrated a high level of professionalism in both small and large productions including the popular musical production, Revolución, which is presented annually at the Chamizal National Memorial Theatre.

This year, the Revolución performances are scheduled for 8 p.m., Friday and Saturday, Nov. 19-20, and at 3 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 21.

The Revolución production was under the direction of founder Sylvia Camañez, well-known ballet folklorico dancer in the region, for 16 years. After her retirement in 2002, she passed the baton to Canutillo ISD.

Coordinating the Folklorico Cuauhtli program for the Canutillo schools is Jorge Valenzuela. He said that his primary focus is to keep the students motivated by providing them with the opportunity to learn and perform in front of an audience, as well as immerse the young people in cultural experiences that will challenge them and sensitize them to multi-culturalism.

"I want to involve them in the learning process for orchestrating a folklorico dance group, so that if in the future, any of them chooses to be a ballet folklorico instructor for other young people, they will feel prepared to do so," Valenzuela said.

Loss to ASU shouldn't bring on wholesale Miner panic

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

The Mike Price era at UTEP got off to a rocky start last week when the Miners were spanked by Arizona State 41-9.

Not the start everyone envisioned, but then again, what else could we have expected?

The Miners are still basically the same team that has held post-game celebrations in just six of their last 36 games.

It's true the Miners made a ton of mistakes last Thursday and at times resembled the stumbling, bumbling teams of defeats gone by. But there was also something else — poise.

The poise that reflects a future champion, still in its infancy.

This UTEP squad, unlike so many of the past, never gave up. They fought hard throughout the ballgame and were hitting as hard in the fourth quarter as they were in the first.

And hit the Sun Devils hard they did. The Miners were flying to the ball.

El Pasoans who were discouraged by last week's results have to remember something. Right now the important thing is not whether the Miners win or lose. Coach Price is instilling a new paradigm, a new attitude, a new level of confidence that comes with a gradual change of personnel and more importantly, some time.

The jury is still out on UTEP quarterback Jordan Palmer but I like what Price is doing. He's giving the young man a chance to grow into the position. After his four-interception performance against ASU it's good to see the coaching staff not panic and go to the bench too early.

This tells a young quarterback that the staff is behind him. Sometimes that kind of confidence can do a lot for the mindset, and then, eventually, a career.

I picked the Miners to come away with five wins this season and the way I see it, they're right on track. I certainly didn't pick the Miners to knock off ASU.

The real test will be this week's home opener. The Miners are supposed to beat Weber State. Just like they were supposed to beat Cal-Poly last year.

There aren't too many weeks during the season when the Miners go into a game as the favorite, but this is one.

And though some people think the only way UTEP can play a lesser team is during an inter-squad scrimmage, the Miners are playing a team they should, and better beat.

Look for the Miners to open up the offense and allow Palmer, running back Howard Jackson, receiver Chris Marrow, and the rest, give the Sun Bowl fans a taste of things to come.

Right now, El Pasoans shouldn't ask, "how many?" They should ask, "how?" Things are advancing slowly — but they are advancing.

A lousy idea

I love this time of the year because the NFL gets going this week. Heck, now that I think if it, the NFL gets going tonight. And that's a lousy idea.

There's nothing like that first Sunday of the season. All the teams get going at the same time. Like a child finding a mountain of gifts spread out all over the living room on Christmas morning, a football fan doesn't even know where to start.

But he dives in headfirst.

The decision-makers at the NFL have taken that special day away from us. They figured it would be a good idea to open the season on a Thursday.

Thursday? I love Monday night and can take the occasional Saturday game but Thursday is usually reserved for some sappy movie of the week the wife wants to watch.

The idea of opening the season on a Thursday is as good an idea as the Yankees opening their season in Japan. And they're still grumbling about that one.

No one, absolutely no one, I have even talked to thinks this is a good idea. It just has the feel of one last exhibition game.

Tonight, the Indianapolis Colts and the New England Patriots go at it. A good matchup no doubt, but the timing is all wrong.

Next time you NFL suits have any idea, ask the fans what they think first.

I wish they had instant replay for some of the decision makers at the offices of the NFL, I can hear it now.

"After further review, it is apparent the idea of opening the season on Thursday has been a total failure and will be abandoned next season."

I can only wish.

Prediction

I don't usually do this but I'm putting it on the line. UTEP 37, Weber State 14.

SISD campuses partner with university

EAST EL PASO COUNTY — Socorro's Escontrias Early Childhood Center and Sierra Vista Elementary School are two of 30 schools out of 1,600 selected to participate in a national study of bilingual education.

Johns Hopkins University selected the two Socorro campuses to be part of the federal Department of Education's study, titled "Effects of Transitional Bilingual Education: Two-Way Development of Structured English Immersion Programs on the Literacy and Oracy of Spanish-Dominant Children." The effort's goal is to determine the most effective ways of teaching bilingual education.

Sierra Vista principal Maria Ramos says she and her staff are thrilled and excited by their selection. The four-year program is starting with kindergarten students.

"This a major federal grant to find out 'best practices' — the best way to teach bilingual classes," Ramos says. "The grant is providing all materials and resources at no cost to us. Every kindergarten student in the program will receive one hardcover book each week to help them start their personal libraries. Parents of these kindergarten students are receiving stipends, and the teachers are receiving stipends and special tutoring to help them determine how bilingual learning process progresses."

The study is sponsored by the agency's Office of English Language Acquisition. Johns Hopkins and the teachers are measuring two methods of bilingual teaching.

Escontrias ECC assistant principal

Dr. Carman Kelsey says the grant came to her school through the famed Success for All teaching program.

"Through 'Success for All,' all of our kindergarten teachers received bilingual instruction from the grant. Two classes of students — one in English immersion, the other in two-way instruction — are being monitored by the grant."

Escontrias Principal Ron First says the grant will be worth about $55,000 to his school. "That's for this first year, about $20,000 in training and stipends, and about $35,000 for books. We're going to have people from Johns Hopkins and Success for All here because we're an SFA National Demonstration school. This is big. Five years from now, education students will be learning how to teach bilingual education from this study."

Monkey see, monkey do

By Don Flood

There's good news for people who, like myself, have long been concerned with the issue of monkey productivity in the United States.

According to Reuters news service, scientists have discovered a form of gene therapy that turns lazy, procrastinating monkeys into workaholics.

All they have to do is prevent brain cells from receiving a chemical messenger called dopamine and monkeys not only stay on task, they make fewer mistakes.

And they work without expecting rewards!

(Indeed, this experiment has been so successful that scientists have turned over much of the research to gene-altered monkeys while they head to the beach.)

It doesn't take much imagination to see how this gene-therapy might also apply to humans.

In fact, this research has led to what I call: The Don Flood Let's-Outsource-All-Our-Work-to-Monkeys Plan.

(Note: Both presidential campaigns are trying to pretend this is their idea. It's all mine.)

Take this column. You may have read it and thought: Hey, monkeys could write this stuff. Well, they can't.

And neither can cats, dogs or even squirrels. One species may be lacking in originality (cats); another seems unable to grasp the concept of irony (dogs); and still others are unable to resist turning every column into a long-winded rant (squirrels).

Monkeys seemed the best bet — fairly original, fairly creative — but try sitting one at a computer and keeping it on task. Good luck!

But let's look at a gene-altered monkey:

ME: Hey, I need you to crank out a couple of humor columns. Pronto.

GENE-ALTERED MONKEY: I'm on it, boss.

ME: And try to make them a little funnier this time. I've got a reputation to uphold.

MONKEY: No problem, boss, I've got some real knee-slappers on the way. Anything else? You know me, I like to keep busy with no hope of reward.

See how great that would be?

Instead of outsourcing jobs to other countries, where workers — you know how humans are — would expect a paycheck, we would outsource work to other species, and we would keep the paycheck.

It's what I call a win-win-win situation.

I don't know why, it just sounds good, and since I feel some dopamine kicking in it's extremely unlikely that I'm going to take the time to figure out what I meant.

Theoretically, I suppose, I could undergo gene therapy myself, but I've been hooked on this dopamine too long to give it up. (Why do you think they call it dope, kid?)

In fact, the world of work is just the beginning. We live in a democracy, but who has time to pay attention and vote?

It's gotten to the point that journalists such as myself are the only ones really paying attention to the race between John So-and-So and President what's-his-face.

And sometimes it seems even journalists are nodding off.

(Dopamine too strong... must... stay... on... task... must... finish... column.)

You wouldn't have that problem with gene-altered monkeys. Heck, they'd be able to pay attention to Al Gore.

Performances are scheduled for the AHS Theater, 12101 Pellicano Drive. Tickets are $5 at the door, $3 in advance with group discounts. For more information, call 937-2800.

Neil Simon's plays almost always fill the theater and that's what Montwood High School's Emerald Players are hoping for with their production of the female version of The Odd Couple.

Performances are planned for Sept. 16, 17 and 18 in the Montwood High School Theater, 12000 Montwood Drive. Kate Keyser is directing the 1984 adaptation of the male version of the original plot, written in the 1960s, which later became a successful film and television series. Admission for the Emerald Players production is $5 for adults, $3 for students. For more information, call 937-2400.

When's the last time you staged a dinner party for a few friends? Chances are it wasn't as quirky or funny as Neil Simon's play Rumors. Three performance of Rumors are scheduled — Sept. 23, 24 and 25, with all shows starting at 7 p.m. Admission is $5 for adults, $3 for students. For more information, call 937-2000.

Social Security Q&A By Ray Vigil

Q: I have worked all of my life, and recently took a disability retirement from my company. But my Social Security disability claim was denied. I have severe arthritis, back problems, and foot trouble. How many disabilities must I have to be eligible for benefits?

A: It is not a question of how many impairments you have. You may be eligible for benefits if one or more of your disabilities is severe enough to prevent you from doing substantial work for at least a year.

Q: I am 63 years old. My husband is 70 and getting Social Security. We have been married for about eight years. Someone told me I have to be married more than 10 years to claim a wife's benefit based on my husband's earnings record. Is this true?

A: Since you are married, you are eligible for benefits now. The 10-year rule applies only to divorced spouses who might potentially be eligible for benefits based on their former spouse's Social Security earnings record. Remember that you can apply for those benefits online from the comfort of your home, worksite or public library.

Q: I am a 23-year-old woman who is disabled and receiving monthly Supplemental Security Income (SSI) payments. I currently have my own apartment. Can I keep my SSI check if I move back into my mother's house?

A: It depends on the financial arrangements you make with your mother. If you pay rent to her (at the prevailing rental rates for your area), or if you pay your share of the household expenses, then your SSI payment rate will probably remain the same. You are required to report this to Social Security. A representative at your local Social Security office can tell you if your payment will be affected.

Q: My mother gets Supplemental Security Income (SSI) payments each month. But for some reason, she is not getting any extra benefits for my 16-year-old sister, who still lives at home. Why is this?

A: The SSI program pays benefits to individuals who are 65 or older or disabled. There are no provisions for dependent's or family benefits. Your sister would qualify for SSI payments herself only if she were disabled.

For more information visit your local Security office, see www.ssa.gov or call us at 1-800-772-1213. If you have any questions that you would like to have answered, please mail them to the Social Security Office, 1111 Gateway West, Attn: Ray Vigil, El Paso, Texas 79935.
