A few weeks into 2005, and many of us already have broken — or at least, bent — New Year's resolutions involving our own health. However, the resolution to protect our animals should always be kept and can be implemented anytime. Texas state veterinarian Bob Hillman offers an alternative list for livestock and poultry producers that should carry significant priority:

- Fence out disease
- Never settle for "almost" in disease eradication
- Volunteer your herd for a cattle tuberculosis (TB) test
- Control flies and ticks
- Maintain a good relationship with your private veterinary practitioner
- Don't stall; call to report unusual signs of disease or pests in livestock

"It doesn't matter which species or how many head of livestock or poultry you own," said Dr. Hillman. "Resolve to keep disease out, control pests, stay alert and report unusual signs of disease. Stay in touch with your private veterinary practitioner and you'll have met important resolutions this year, and every year. These could be your most cost-effective and beneficial livestock and flock management decisions."

Clint and San Elizario lose County public transit service

EAST EL PASO COUNTY — El Paso County will discontinue its rural bus service on Route 80 to Clint via Alameda and on Route 81 to San Elizario via Socorro, effective Friday, Jan. 28.

Bob Geyer, the County's transit manager, said the termination of service on those routes was due to a lack of funds. The service was partially operating with Congestion, Mitigation and Air Quality (CMAQ) funds from the Federal Transit Administration. Bus service on those routes started Jan. 28, 2002.

"Unfortunately, those funds are available for only three years at a time and only to implement new bus routes," Geyer said. "However, many passengers who now use Route 80 to Clint will be able to use the County's Rural Transit Route 40, and we're working on how to provide the people of San Elizario with bus transportation."

Geyer explained that the operating cost for those two routes was $202,824 for each of the three years. Revenues from the service amounted to approximately $14,093 per year. The federal CMAQ funds paid 80 percent of the remainder, or an estimated $150,985, with the County paying 20 percent of the deficit, or $37,746.

"At this time, the budget does not allow the County to make such a commitment, and to pay the whole amount for the service," Geyer said. "The County already has a Rural Transit system that provides service on four routes to Anthony, Montana Vista, Horizon City, Tornillo and Fabens through other grants from the federal and state governments."

"We know there's a desperate need for more public transit outside the El Paso city limits," Geyer added, "and we're working on getting additional funding."

Passengers who need a schedule of the El Paso County's Route 40 to Clint can call 543-3848.

Fabens ISD proposes $11 million in bonds to upgrade school facilities

FABENS — The Fabens school district will ask voters to approve $11 million in bonds on Feb. 5, to obtain property for and finance construction of new school facilities for the district, and to authorize the district to levy its maintenance tax under current school finance law.

A district spokesman said Fabens Primary School was built in 1949; Risinger Primary School was built in 1953; and O'Donnell Elementary School was built in 1964. The proceeds of the bonds would be used to build and equip new facilities and renovate existing facilities.

Under the current Texas school finance system, the State pays approximately 90 percent of the debt service for the District's outstanding bonds, and local taxes are used to pay the remaining 10 percent.

Assuming that the District would continue to receive a similar amount of State aid for debt service under either the current school finance system or under a new system, the property owners in Fabens ISD would see an estimated tax increase of about seven cents per $100 of assessed valuation, after homestead and other exemptions.

Based on current projections by the financial consultant to the District, the taxes on homes in Fabens would increase by approximately $7.20 for each $10,000 of taxable assessed valuation. A $40,000 home would see an increase of about $28.80 a year.

Citizens who are 65 years of age or older and who filed for the homestead exemption would be entitled to have their taxes frozen at age 65 and would not receive any increase in property taxes as a result of this bond issue, district officials said.

Levine, Cook picked to head new SISD schools

EAST EL PASO COUNTY — Socorro ISD's two newest schools will be led by veteran district employees.

During the Jan. 18 regular meeting, the SISD Board of Trustees approved the selection of Janet Levine, assistant principal of O'Shea Keleher Elementary School to head the Hurshel Antwine campus while Loma Verde Elementary School assistant principal Susan Cook will lead the John Drugan campus.

The Antwine campus is now being built between Montana Street and Loop 375 North. The District plans to break ground for the Drugan campus within the next two months. Both schools will serve students from pre-kindergarten through the eighth-grade.

Levine has worked in SISD as a teacher, programs specialist and assistant principal.

She has worked at Socorro's Myrtle Cooper, H.D. Hilley and O'Shea campuses, and also worked as an instructional specialist for the District's Title I program. The New York native was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts in Elementary Education from Pace University in New York City, and Master of Science in Early Childhood Education from The College of

New Rochelle in New Rochelle, New York. She says she's excited about opening a new school and thankful for the opportunity,

Flu shots open to everyone

Hand-washing, staying home can prevent spread of flu

TEXAS — The Texas Department of State Health Services (DSHS) recommended Tuesday that the flu vaccine be given to anyone 6 months of age or older.

Since October when a national flu vaccine shortage was announced, federal and state health officials had recommended limiting the flu shot to those in several priority groups.

DSHS officials said the goal had been to make sure those at high risk of severe complications from the flu had an adequate chance to get the flu shot.

"Demand for the flu vaccine from priority groups in Texas had been steady for several weeks.

But it appears, overall, that those demands are being met. We're comfortable loosening the recommendations," said Eduardo Sanchez, Texas Commissioner of State Health Services.

He said local public health departments may choose to continue recommending limiting the flu shot to priority groups, depending on the supply and demand situation in their communities.

Noting that flu season officially runs through May, Sanchez said, "It's not too late to get a flu shot and have it do some good."

Flu activity in Texas last week remained at the "widespread" level for the third week in a row.

Flu activity classifications range from no activity to sporadic, local, regional and widespread. The widespread classification is used when there is an increase in flu and flu-like illnesses and recent laboratory confirmed flu in at least half of a state's regions.

The A/Fujian and B/Shanghai forms of the flu virus have been identified in Texas. Both are covered by this season's vaccine.

People wanting to get a flu shot should contact their doctor, call the 2-1-1 information service or call their local public health department or nearest DSHS regional office.

It takes about two weeks after getting the flu shot for the vaccine to offer maximum protection.

A pneumococcal vaccine also is recommended for people 65 and older and those with chronic health problems to protect against pneumonia caused by pneumococcus bacteria. Pneumonia is often a complication of influenza.

Meanwhile, DSHS says forty-seven percent of Americans don't wash their hands long enough to reduce the spread of cold and flu germs, according to a new poll, conducted by Harris Research.

Health officials say people should use soap and water, or an alcohol-based hand cleaner, and wash their hands for at least 15 to 20 seconds to effectively disinfect against germs, bacteria and viruses.

"We share cubicles, office equipment, and kitchen facilities with close interaction ongoing and unavoidable," said Jeppe Gustin Ross, human resource director for the Texas Medical Association.

Uniformity

They say you can't judge a book by its cover, a problem and who you don't want to see when you're engaged in questionable activity such as shoplifting, speeding or hijacking an airplane.

but it helps. How else can you make that initial decision as to whether you are even interested in looking inside?

People are the same way. Like it or not, first impressions are lasting, and first impressions always include what we have chosen to put on our bodies.

For lots of folks, there isn't any choice. They are the lucky ones.

The school where my kids go every morning requires that they wear uniforms. The price is a little hefty at the beginning of the school year, but it sure alleviates the distress and trauma involved when young girls attempt to dress themselves at an early hour.

In their uniforms they look like shiny new pennies, all neat and bright, in blue, white and gold. Even if they grumble about it, I know there is a certain security in knowing that every other girl at school today is going to be wearing basically the same thing.

In this case, showing up at the party in the same dress as someone else is a good thing. We can worry about variety on days off.

I always liked the "scrubs" that nurses and other health care workers wear. They are practical, non-binding, and come in enough varieties so you don't have to get bored. Still, when you see the uniform, it is like declaring your profession. So I don't wear them — don't want to give the wrong impression.

Then there are military, policemen, security guards, and airline pilots. You know by just looking at them that they are official and in authority — the take-charge sort of people you want to have around when you have

The same goes for uniforms associated with specific corporations, like the UPS man in brown, the McDonald's fast food worker in a jaunty little cap or the folks wearing the eternal blue Wal-Mart vest.

Uniforms, like book covers, can also be misleading. I recently watched the movie Catch Me If You Can, which is based on a true story. It stars Tom Hanks and Leonardo DeCaprio in which the latter performs astounding scams, successfully passing himself off as a teacher, an airline pilot, a doctor and a lawyer, all before his eighteenth birthday.

As unlikely as this sounds, there is one very revealing little story the scamster's father relates. He asks his son why he thinks the New York Yankees win so many games. His son replies that it was because — at that time — they had Mickey Mantle on the team. No, the father replies, it is because the opposing team is in awe of the pin-striped uniforms that signify the Yankees' stature. The young man successfully uses that principle to his advantage over and over.

Uniforms can do that, and terrible things have happened as a result of a criminal mind fooling an innocent with a false first impression.

But what about the rest of us? What kind of uniform do we purchase to put in our closets, choose to take out each morning, and why?

I grew up around men whose uniforms consisted of Western boots, Levi's and workshirts, topped off with a very practical cowboy hat. It took me a long time to get used to seeing men wearing slacks, regular shoes and dress shirts.

Then things got even more complicated. Nowadays, the folks who work in agriculture and perform so-called country music are likely to dress like rockers and sports stars, while the insurance salesman is likely to come calling in traditional Western wear.

Things have never been the same since John Travolta and Urban Cowboy.

Among women, of course, dressing is as complicated as we can possibly make it. At a recent awards banquet, my companion noted that the "best and brightest" had chosen to wear their "best and tightest."

Some of the stuff we go out in public wearing should be against the law, or quarantined as a health hazard. Our "uniforms" vary from the latest in hooker wear to slovenly camp, from just the plain ordinary to what-was-she-thinking, and, occasionally, something truly pleasant and tasteful.

My choices still run to the hopelessly practical — if I can't work in it, I probably won't wear it, which means lots of jeans and sturdy footwear. I really have to strive to strike a balance by incorporating the attractive and feminine. Like most women, though, I hold near and dear the prerogative to choose what I'm going to wear today.

So much for uniformity.

Reyes Reports

By U.S. Rep. Silvestre Reyes

North Korean meetings positive for security

During my first trip to Pyongyang, North Korea 18 months ago with a small group of congressional colleagues, none of us knew quite what to expect because North Korea is probably the most closed society on earth.

Some of our encounters were predictable — suspicion, anti-American tirades, and a chilly government-to-government reception. However, some things surprised us. For instance, the U.S. State Department had warned us that our accommodations would lack the bare essentials, but our hotel was comparable to a Holiday Inn and we were provided with soap, shampoo, towels, and toilet paper. We were permitted to walk around freely and speak to anyone we encountered. We also visited an art studio, went to a few restaurants, and even attended a religious service where we were welcomed by and worshiped with North Koreans.

On my second trip to North Korea earlier this month, the cold winter temperatures made it obvious that the country suffers from a catastrophic power shortage. While our meeting rooms were usually heated, it was apparent on our visits to public places that North Korean citizens are left to deal with brutal winter temperatures as best they can. During one meeting with General Lee, the chief Demilitarized Zone negotiator, he informed us that the room's chilly temperature was due to the United States' failure to follow through on our agreement to help the North Korean government build much-needed power plants. However, Lee forgets that this agreement was contingent on North Korea's promise not to develop nuclear capabilities.

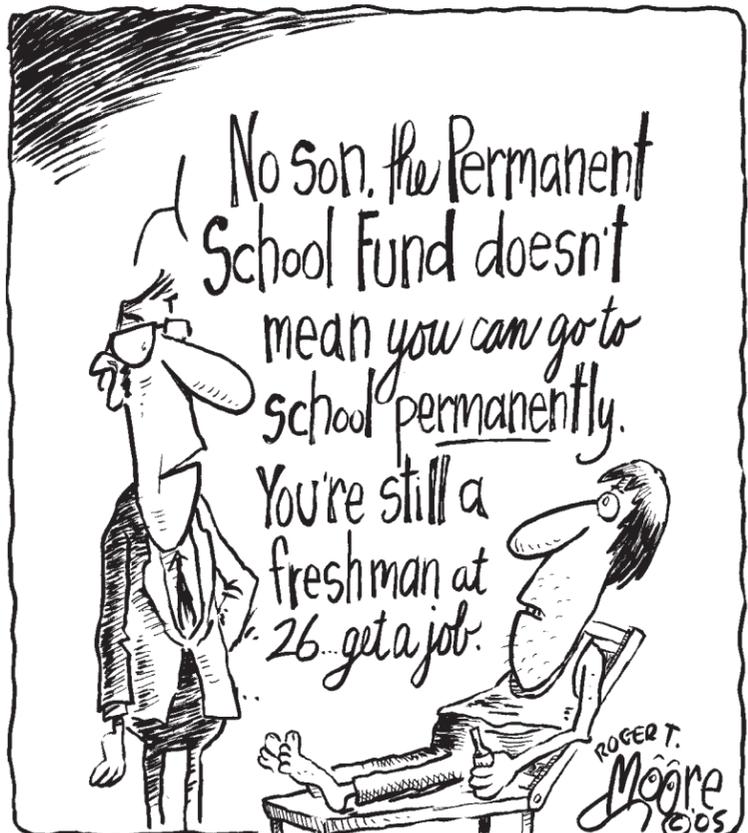

Our mission on this trip was to get the North Korean government back to the negotiating table in the six-party talks — and after our meetings, officials in Pyongyang said they would do so if the U.S. refrained from criticizing them. Through the six-party talks, Japan, China, Russia, South Korea, the United States and North Korea are working together to eliminate North Korea's nuclear capabilities, which are a threat to the security of the region and the world. During our initial visit, we were able to convince the North Koreans to begin these negotiations. Unfortunately, they backed out of the negotiations about six months ago, and things have been at an impasse ever since. So, it was left to us to convince them to return to the table.

We spent four days and three nights in North Korea and engaged not only their chief negotiator, but also met with President Kim Yong Nam, the official head of state of the Supreme Peoples' Assembly. This meeting was scheduled for fifteen minutes, but we actually spoke for an hour and a half. These discussions were tough, but necessary. At a press conference we held in Seoul, South Korea expressing our optimism that North Korea would return to the six-party talks as a result of these meetings, I was amazed that we received a standing ovation from the reporters.

Sometimes we forget that people who live under the threat of a nuclear holocaust are counting on us for their security. I met with Fort Bliss's Patriot soldiers stationed in South Korea and was struck by the fact that they face that same threat and are depending on the U.S. government to keep them safe from North Korea's nuclear weapons. We have done our job — now the ball is in the Administration's court.

Tornillo loses community matriarch in the death of Ana Maria Cano TORNILLO — Ana Maria Gardea Cano, 82, beloved mother, grandmother, great-grandmother, sister, aunt and friend sadly passed away on Jan. 20, 2005.

She was born in Tornillo in 1922 to Maria and Tanis Gardea and was a life-long resident of this East El Paso County community.

She was a member of Santa Rita Catholic Church, where she sang in the choir until 2000. She married Jesus Cano Sr. and they owned and operated the Tornillo Trading Post for most of their lives, from 1951 to 2002. Though he died 24 years ago, her store remained very important to her, as it was the central meeting place for friends, families and people passing through Tornillo.

"Ani," as she was called, was a special friend to everyone. People not only came to buy, but just to visit, say hello and savor her delicious tacos and hamburgers. She touched many lives and will be greatly missed by all.

She took the education of Tornillo's children very seriously, even providing meals for the Tornillo Headstart program students until the cafeteria was built. She also was active with the Paso Del Norte Food Bank, to help provide assistance for the needy in the community.

She is survived by her daughter Graciela Cano Quintanilla and her husband Chente, her son Jesus Cano Jr. and his wife Bertha. Grandchildren Molly Ruttle and husband Chris, Sally Upchurch, Yvonne Flores and husband Alonzo, Yvette Quintanilla and husband Daniel, Chris Cano and wife Shanna, Brian Cano and wife Virginia. Great-Grandchildren Steven, Matthew, Ashley, Allison, Daniel, Brandyn, Brittany, Jarred, Matthew, Gabe and wife Andrea and Lawrence. Great-Granddaughter Sheala. Brother Ted Gardea, sisters Mague Zavala, Celia Ronquillo and Alicia Hernandez and numerous nieces and nephews.

She was buried Saturday, Jan. 22 in the Fabens Catholic Cemetery.

"The Quintanilla and Cano families extend our appreciation and gratitude to friends and family that were with us during the time of our sorrow when we lost our beloved Ana Maria Cano," a family spokesman said. "Thank you for your prayers, food and friendship."

coworkers and health officials disagree and want you to stay home. Coworkers are the number-one spreader of germs.

"I think all employers have an obligation to offer resources for preventing employee illness, but I also think employees have an obligation to their coworkers. Sick employees do a service to themselves and their coworkers if they stay home and get healthy before returning to work," said Ross.

A growing problem for many American workers is they don't get paid if they stay home due to an illness. According to a June 2004 report by the National Partnership for Women and Families, 47 percent of Americans working in private industry have no paid sick days. For the workers who do, sick time often is used for other reasons, such as caring for a sick child or elderly parent. When an employee becomes sick with no sick leave remaining, he or she may believe the only option is to show up to work, spreading germs to those around them.

To get through this cold and flu season experts recommend frequent, effective hand washing, avoiding very crowded areas such as shopping malls, grocery stores, and movie theatres — especially if you are ill.

Canutillo ISD may name new road after fallen soldier

By Don Woodyard
Courier Staff Writer

CANUTILLO — Canutillo ISD was presented some interesting issues, like selection of artificial turf, naming a new road, and deciding whether the district should go into park management during the Jan. 11 meeting of the board of trustees.

After discussion, the board approved use of artificial turf for the field. As a part of a total $705,000 package, details of which were wrapped up at a subsequent Jan. 20 special board meeting, U.S. Track and Turf will handle the football field as well as outdoor surfacing for the basketball and tennis courts and the track.

Alfredo Vasquez, public information officer for the district, said the football field turf would feature a district logo of some kind. The school's name would be in the end zones.

Trustee Raphael Reyes proposed naming the shared road that will run between the high school and the Northwest Campus of the El Paso Community College in honor of Sgt. Isela Rubalcava, a 1995 Canutillo High School graduate who was killed in Iraq. Education Blvd. was a name that had previously been suggested for the roadway.

Board president Joe Villarreal spoke of the importance of having public input before making a decision on the name. "Our mandate is to include the public," he said.

Yusuf Farran, the district's construction administrator for the high school, pointed out that the road belonged to the City of El Paso. The board instructed Superintendent Charles Hart to have Farran check with the city officials about the naming process and report back to the board.

County Commissioner Dan Haggerty seemed to be practicing the "try, try again" principle when he optimistically tried once again to persuade trustees of the Canutillo ISD to take over operation of Gallegos Park.

Haggerty first proposed the idea in a meeting on Aug. 19, 2004 with Hart. The board formally rejected the offer Sept. 14 because of the expense of maintaining the facility.

"Somebody has to take it over; we can't do it anymore," Haggerty appealed to the board. "I want to give it to you; (but) it's a loser; it loses money," the candid commissioner continued. "It is losing money because it is a park."

Haggerty's plea, despite being sweetened with $1.8 million in bond issue and state grant money, again fell on deaf ears as the board declined to take over operation of the Upper Valley park on Bosque Road near the high school.

The reason for turning down Haggerty was the same as at its September meeting — the ongoing expense of operating the park after the initial funds run out.

"We have enough of a problem educating our kids," said Villarreal.

Haggerty said that if no one takes over the park, the county would have to give the land back to the PSB (Public Service Board). He said the county would probably stop maintaining the park after this year.

TORNILLO — The Tornillo Independent School District hosted its third annual Tornillo Basketball Tournament, Jan 13-15. The three-day tournament included participants from Marfa, Van Horn, Anthony, and Ft. Hancock School Districts, as well as Tornillo's own 7th and 8th grade basketball teams.

The Tornillo boys and girls teams took the championship in the 7th grade division. The 7th grade girls earned the championship for the third year in a row.

The Anthony boys team and the Marfa girls team were victorious in 8th grade division.

The TISD 7th grade boys team is coached by Carlos Garcia, and the 7th grade girls team is coached by Luis Esparza. The 8th grade boys team is coached by Willie Flores, and the 8th grade girls team is coached by Maria Rivera.

Tornillo Athletic Director Damaso Martinez and Coach Marlene Bullard did an outstanding job setting up the facilities and hospitality rooms for the visiting teams.

Henson, Haskins were the last of a bygone era

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

If any of you in the greater El Paso Southwest are feeling a tinge of loss today there's a valid reason for it.

Have you ever had that strange feeling that you're missing something but have no clue what it is? You have that kind of empty feeling and no matter how hard you try, you can't summon up the source of the void.

Don't worry. I'm here to explain your mysterious sense of loss.

We've not only come to an end of an era, we've just witnessed a complete and irreversible paradigm shift.

With the retirement of New Mexico State basketball coach Lou Henson last week, the last ties to the good old days of the local legendary coaching hierarchy were effectively clipped.

The days of one team, one coach, have become as common as choirboys.

The time of legends like Don Haskins and Lou Henson have passed. For years we knew that the sun would come up in El Paso, politicians would do something questionable in El Paso, and Don Haskins would be the coach in El Paso.

And people in Las Cruces felt the same about Henson.

But like everything else in this country, things are changing at an alarming rate. Coaches don't coach at colleges any more. They make pit stops at colleges on their way to the bigger bucks at bigger colleges or the pros.

And we've had our fill of that in El Paso. Bob Stull had some successful seasons and left for something better. Billy Gillispie had a successful season and left for something better. Jason Rabedeaux just left.

But the days of a coach staying at one place for 30 years have gone from being an uncommon occurrence to being an utter mirage.

It was sad to think that the UTEP-NMSU days of my youth are no more. I remember the days of Nate Archibald, Mike Switzer and Bob Doyle for UTEP against the likes of Charlie Criss, Jimmy Collins and Sam Lacey for the Aggies.

The Miners win the NCAA championship and the Aggies go to the final four.

What battles through the years — those epic moments and historic matches in front of rabid crowds at the Pan American Center and Memorial Gym and the Don Haskins Center.

And just like that, it's all gone.

But the only thing good about the end of eras are the blossoming of new ones.

And though we won't see the likes of two masters making national headlines in this part of the country — just 40 miles apart from each other — ever again, at least we have those memories.

And what would this part of the country be like if these two gentlemen never came, or stayed? That's a memory I don't even want to think about.

Lakers find answer

The Los Angeles Lakers had a decision to make at the end of last season. The decision was either to keep Kobe Bryant or Shaquille O'Neal.

We all know who the Lakers chose and it's rather evident that they made a big mistake.

While the Miami Heat are playing the best basketball in the East because of the addition of Shaq, the Lakers are battling to stay in the playoff hunt with Kobe at the helm.

But the Lakers are beginning to show signs of life. And the funny thing is that the Lakers started playing better after Kobe went out with his ankle injury.

Before Bryant got hurt the Lakers were struggling to stay above water with an 18-15 (54-percent) record. Bryant got hurt in the first quarter a couple weeks ago with his team trailing the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Without Kobe, the Lakers rallied over the final three quarters and won. In fact, the Lakers have gone 4-1 (80-percent) without Bryant since last Monday.

It's amazing how a team can perform when other players on the team get to touch the ball.

Want proof that Kobe's ball hogging hurts the team? Here's an interesting stat for you. When Kobe Bryant has led his team in scoring this year, the Lakers are 13-13. When some other player leads the team in scoring the Lakers are 9-3.

Coincidence? I think not.

There's no doubt that Kobe Bryant is one of the best individual talents in the league. But give me Steve Nash or Tim Duncan or Kevin Garnett any day. They do whatever it takes to make their team better.

All Kobe's ever worried about was stepping out from Shaq's considerable shadow. Well, now he has, and the results aren't impressive.

Larry Bird and Magic Johnson taught the league many years ago that the only way to win consistently was to include your teammates. Make them feel like you have confidence in their abilities.

I don't think Kobe Bryant has shown any of his teammates that he trusts them with the basketball.

And if the Lakers keep winning in his absence, the rest of the team may not trust Kobe when he comes back.

So far out, I'm almost in

By Don Flood

Last year's Super Bowl controversy: Janet Jackson flashes 1 billion people.

This year's Super Bowl controversy: Where are the strippers?

For all the hullabaloo last year, I don't think you'd have too many people actually turning the TV off if Janet Jackson were to appear again.

Americans just don't get offended like they used to.

This New Year's Eve, for example, on national TV, a member of the band Mötley Crüe said a bad word — the big one. (A member of Mötley Crüe saying a bad word — who'd have guessed?)

But according to one story, NBC didn't receive a single phone call. Not one.

Oh sure, you probably had some people at home saying, "I can't bleeping believe it. They're bleeping cussing on network TV now."

But nobody so much as picked up their bleeping telephone.

Times are changing, to coin a phrase, which is obvious when you read the annual "what's in, what's out" listing in the Washington Post.

Naturally, I've never heard of anything on the "in" list.

Worse, I've never heard of anything on the "out" list either.

Which means: People, fashions, foods, styles have come and gone without even crossing my radar screen!

(I know, I know! Bob Dole thought "radar screen" sounded old fogy too, but he refused to tell me what all the hep cats are saying now.)

For example, Jimmy Choo is "out" and Holly Dunlap is "in."

No clue about either one. (Sure, I could ask Bob Dole, but he probably won't tell me.)

But all is not lost. There was one performer on the "in" list I could identify — Barry Manilow!

This is extraordinary. The only possible explanation is that Manilow was so far "out" he sneaked in from the other side.

Admitting to liking Barry Manilow when I was in high school — that's right, he goes all the way back to the 1500s — would have been like admitting to being radioactive, except you'd have less chance of getting a date.

His songs are so sugary they're off limits to people on a low-carb diet.

And speaking of diet, guess what's out — abs! Abs, of course, are the basis for most pop singers' recording careers. (Fortunately, they don't have to depend on their vocal cords.)

But something else is "in" — devil horns. Devil horns are what now make you a "hottie" (which I realize may be a dated term, but Bob Dole assured me it was still OK).

Naturally, you have questions: Do I have devil horns? Where do I look for them? Could I be a hottie?

Let me save you some time here. No to all three questions, you pathetic loser. Devil horns are muscles located just inside the hips, and real people don't have them. In fact, most experts in human anatomy agree they don't actually exist.

That's because to have devil horns you have to either 1) swim 32 hours a day, or 2) be stranded on a desert island with nothing to eat but Barry Manilow recordings.

And either option would drive you bleeping crazy.

Social Security Q&A By Ray Vigil

Q: I didn't sign up for Medicare medical insurance when I was first eligible. Can I sign up now?

A: If you did not sign up for Medicare Part B when you were first eligible, what we call your initial enrollment period, each year you are given another chance to sign up during a general enrollment period. The general enrollment period begins January 1 and ends March 31 of each year. If you sign up during this general enrollment period this year, your coverage will begin July 2005. The monthly premium for Medicare Part B for 2005 is $78.20. However, your monthly premium increases 10 percent for each 12-month period that you were eligible but did not enroll, so your premium might be higher if you are enrolling during this year's general enrollment period.

Q: I am 63 years old, and planning to retire this year. But I still have two children, ages 16 and 11, living at home. Will they be eligible for monthly Social Security checks after I retire?

A: Monthly Social Security payments may be made to a worker's unmarried children under age 18, or age 19 if still in high school, or children age 18 or over who were severely disabled before age 22 and who continue to be disabled. Children who may qualify for benefits include the worker's biological child, legally adopted child, dependent stepchild or dependent grandchild.

Q: I have had direct deposit of my Social Security checks for several years now. But I am thinking of changing to a different bank that is offering a better interest rate on my checking and savings accounts. What do I need to do to make sure my direct deposit isn't messed up?

A: When you open the account at your new bank, ask for direct deposit. Staff at the bank will be glad to help you. Or, you may call Social Security's toll-free number, 1-800-772-1213. When you call, be sure to have your Social Security number and a personal check or statement from your new account. The Social Security representative will need information from these documents to start your new direct deposit. Also, we recommend that you wait until deposits are going to your new bank, savings and loan or credit union before you close your old account.

For more information visit your local Security office, see www.ssa.gov or call us at 1-800-772-1213. If you have any questions that you would like to have answered, please mail them to the Social Security Office, 1111 Gateway West, Attn: Ray Vigil, El Paso, Texas 79935.
