New NJHS

To recognize junior high school students' high grades, hard work, positive attitudes, and consistent support and loyalty to their school, the National Junior Honor Society was created, and a chapter has been chartered at Tornillo Junior High School, according to Emily Baker. On Feb. 29 the new NJHS chapter held its first induction ceremony. Eighth graders inducted were Lucero Alvidrez, Carlos Moreno, Jissel Reyes, Manuel Reyes, Veronica Terrazas, Tracey Valdez, and Benjamin Valencia. Seventh grade honorees were Benito Aguirre, Linda Amaro, Yuriko Barrera, Leticia Carrillo, Christina Cortez, Lizeth Delgado, Ricardo Esparza, and Luz Rivera. All of the students inducted into NJHS had a grade average above an 85 and are excellent representatives of Tornillo Junior High. These students will be given opportunities to earn service hours by participating in a range of volunteer activities. Although the eighth grade students will move on to Tornillo High School next year, the recognition and honor will remain. The seventh graders inducted will further the goals of NJHS next year.

SEHS HOSA students qualify for state

By Phillip Cortez
 Special to the Courier

SAN ELIZARIO — The San Elizario High School Health Occupations Students of America (HOSA) program will once again send students to the state competition in Dallas, set for April 6-9. SEHS seniors Cecy Martinez and Alonzo Rodriguez were among hundreds of participants in their respective categories and each came away with first place finishes at the Area HOSA Competition held in El Paso in early March.

In order for Martinez to advance to the skills portion of Category II Skills, Sports Medicine, she had to score among the top 20 percent in the written examination. Martinez then demonstrated outstanding technique in the ankle wrap. Ankles are a common area of injury among athletes.

Rodriguez demonstrated strong interviewing and resume writing skills in Category III Job Seeking Skills. Rodriguez was required to write a letter of application, a resume, undergo an interview, and submit a letter of thanks.

"I think it says a lot for our program in San Elizario," said Mathilda Mirabal, HOSA coordinator at the campus. "It says a lot for the kids."

According to Mirabal, the HOSA program allows students to meet their potential, building up their confidence and self-esteem.

secondary education, even if it's not in the medical field."

For Martinez and Rodriguez, both would like to explore opportunities in the medical field as they decide which routes they will take after high school. As state-qualifying HOSA students, it looks like they have a nice head start.

County Courthouse holds open house on April 13

El Paso County will open its Courthouse doors again this year for its second annual celebration of National County Government Week on April 13.

"This is a great opportunity for El Pasoans of every age to learn what their County government does and how it spends taxpayers' money," said Commissioner Betti Flores, who will be part of the welcoming committee during the event. "We'll have booths, with displays and exhibits, from every County department showcasing what they do and how they benefit the community."

The doors from the County Courthouse will open for the festivities from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday, April 13 at 500 E. San Antonio, with members of Commissioners Court welcoming visitors. The entertainment will begin with the Cathedral High School Choir, followed by Bowie High School's Los Osos Orgullosos Mariachi, folk dancing and more. Tours of the Courthouse and the individual

Medical association advises taking control of your healthcare, life while you can

By Pamela Baggett
 Special to the Courier

Every Texan owes it to his or her family to execute an advance medical directive and medical power of attorney, according to Bohn D. Allen, MD, president of the Texas Medical Association.

"We are witnessing the anguish that follows when families face the question of what quality of life is acceptable — what degree of medical intervention is appropriate — when a loved one's life is in balance," Dr. Allen said. "All of this can be avoided if you, if I, if all of us, make the very simple effort to fill out two simple but critically important forms to designate who has the right to make that decision when we are unable to do so for ourselves, and to let that person know exactly what our wishes are."

The Texas Medical Association Web site has a link to the Medical Power of Attorney form and the Directive to Physicians at www.texmed.org/directive. The link also leads to information about the responsibilities of the person granted the power to make decision on your behalf, and responsibilities of medical professionals in carrying out those wishes.

The most dramatic life-or-death cases make headlines, but sometimes health decisions that are serious, but not life-threatening need to be made, perhaps while a patient is under anesthesia.

"There is a chance in everyone's lifetime of being seriously injured, ill, or otherwise unable to make decisions regarding health care," Dr. Allen said. "If this should happen, it would be helpful to have someone who knows your values and in whom you have trust to make such decisions for you."

"Almost everyone is discussing with the people around us our wishes should we be in a condition where we cannot speak for ourselves," Dr. Allen added. "Be clear, be very clear with your loved ones and the person you grant the power to make that decision on your behalf, exactly what you want. This includes deciding whether to donate your organs for the benefit of others after you die."

No beach parties here, but El Paso/Juarez is a spring break hot spot

EL PASO COUNTY — This week more than two million students are traveling to a party paradise on Spring Break and as many as 97 percent of those under legal age will use this break as an opportunity to drink, even binge, on alcohol, according to Laura Villarreal, Program Coordinator for Operation BRIDGE (Bi-national Responsibility to Interrupt the Drinking Gateway Environment).

For six years, the Pacific Institute for Research and Evaluation has been sending a team of surveyors from San Diego to conduct research on the Santa Fe Bridge. Their studies show that youth from Fabens, Canutillo, Anthony, San Elizario, Ysleta, Clint, Ruidoso, Dell City, Carlsbad, Truth or Consequences, Cloudcroft, Las Cruces, Deming, Silver City, and Alamogordo, drive to El Paso with the express intent of crossing the border and partying in Juarez, Mexico.

The average male student on Spring Break will down almost 20 drinks a day, the average female almost a dozen. Some will exceed the average to a dangerous degree, those studies show.

"Local and national media will focus on the tragic consequences that follow — incidents of alcohol poisoning; automobile crashes; public drunkenness and destruction of property; high-risk sexual behavior, including rape; and even the possibility of death," Villarreal said. "According to the American Medical Association, 97 percent of college students under 21 are likely to drink during spring break and 80 percent of parents said they were concerned about students drinking alcohol during spring break. "Devastating consequences aside, the abuse of alcohol by underage drinkers will largely be met with a wink and a nod among public officials, and outright promotion by an industry that derives 20 percent of its income from illegal underage drinking," she said.

- A spouse has a heart attack, oxygen is cut off to the brain for 10 or more minutes, and consciousness does not return for days.

A smashing performance

There are a lot of events I enjoy but don't go to as often as I'd like. The symphony is one of them.

I wasn't raised on classical music. It was sort of an acquired taste in adulthood. Like most genres of music, some of it is enjoyable, some of it not. I'm not much on listening to the heavy, dark stuff.

Last weekend was something of an exception though. You can always count on Joseph Haydn's compositions to be uplifting and relatively lighthearted, and the first half of the performance held true to form. The second half, however, took something of a different turn, with a dark, moody piece by Dmitri Shostakovich about the massacre of some 1,000 unarmed workmen protesting during the Russian Revolution in 1905.

Now, I'm about as far from any kind of valid music critic as you can possibly get. The responses evoked in my thought processes by symphony performances are about as low-brow as they come, because, you see, the thing I enjoy most about the symphony isn't the music.

It's the musicians. There's something mystical and extraordinary about people who play music professionally, especially on the level of symphony performance. The precision, the timing, the code written into tiny black symbols of dots and squiggles, the ambiance of wood, string, brass and black clothing all combine for a most intriguing effect. Like every other specialized sector of our society, it has its own unique language, rules of conduct, dress code and patterns of behavior.

Therefore, to an incurable people watcher, the people who participate in this process are extremely interesting.

They come in all shapes and sizes of both sexes, of all ages. Some are beautiful, some not; some have friendly, smiling faces, others are scowling, or have arrogant or austere expressions; some have unreadable faces but expressive hands.

I love to sit way up high for effect, preferably in the balcony, but binoculars are a must to catch the really good stuff.

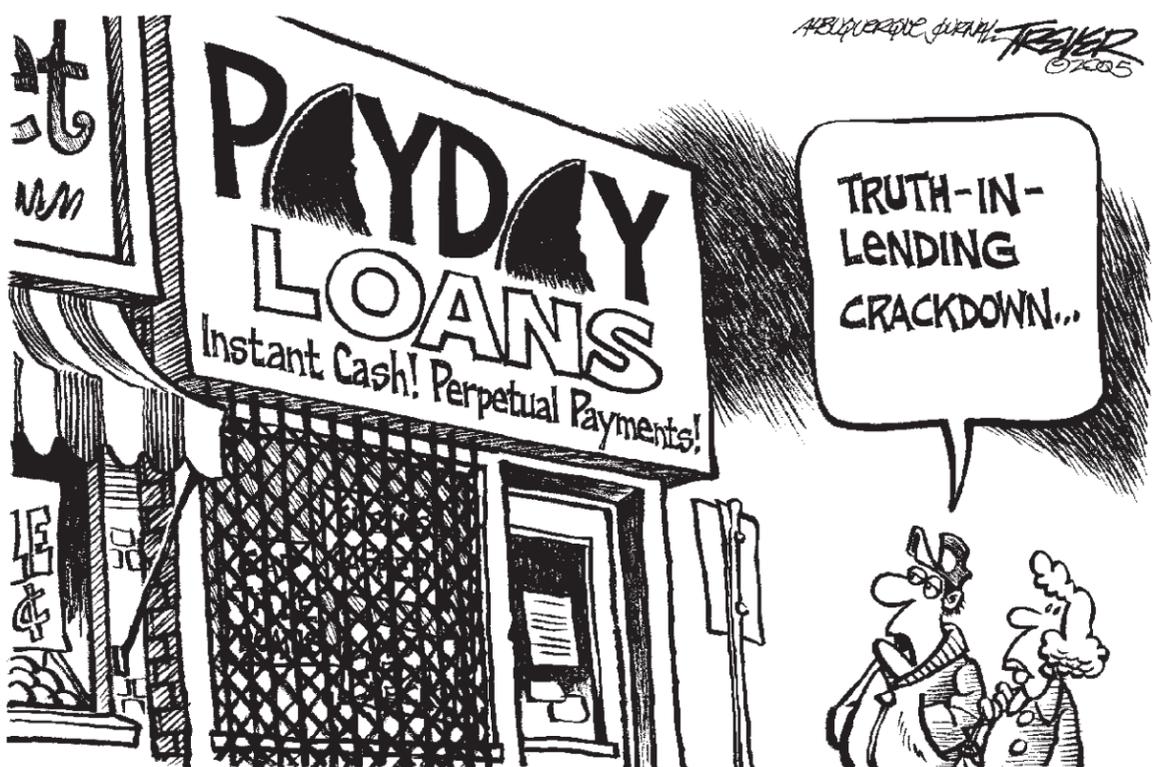

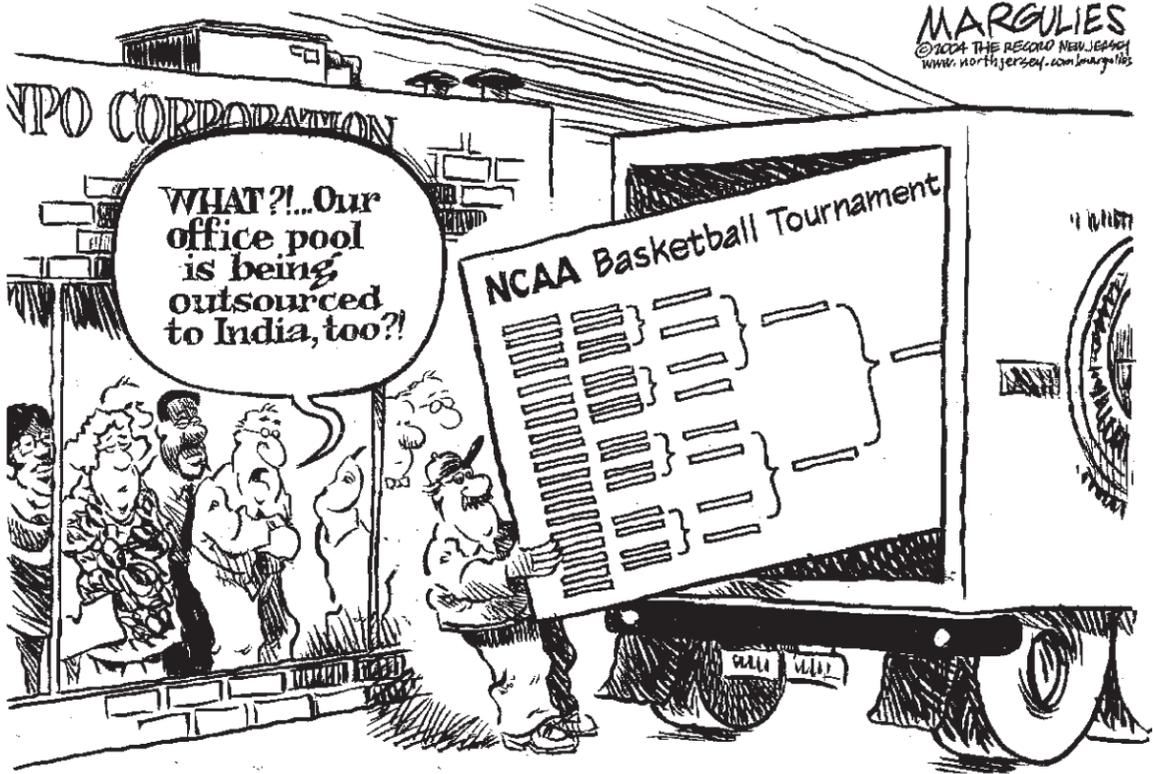

One thing I've noticed is that the long, dark, dramatic performances require a lot more people to make all the special little sounds, so watching a live performance is much more interesting than listening to a CD.

After the Haydn piece, which required only enough musicians to fill about half the seats on the stage, the cavalry arrived in force. They kept coming until I was afraid there wouldn't be room for the energetic little conductor, Christopher Zimmerman, to find his way from the wings back to the podium. But he was just as agile weaving his way past the percussion section and dodging viola bows as he was leading his musical troops through the crashing chords of turn-of-the-century Russia.

A few folks were seated along the walls who, at first, seemed to have no purpose. They sat with folded hands through most of the hour-long event. But I've discovered that they reward these patient ones by letting them make the biggest, most astonishing and outrageous noises, like the gong or the cymbals. The gong-lady, at the height of the massacre scene, was even allowed to give what one of my companions called a "gong solo."

I've never seen a more passionate cymbals man than the one on duty

Reyes Reports By U.S. Rep. Silvestre Reyes

U.S.-Mexico border region is focus of conference

It's not often that CNN's Lou Dobbs — best known for his nightly "Broken Borders" segment — and the CEO of the National Council of La Raza, Janet Murguia, get together to discuss illegal immigration.

However, a roundtable discussion I moderated at the Ninth Annual U.S.-Mexico Border Issues Conference last week brought together not only Dobbs and Murguia, but Congressman David Dreier (R-CA) and Congressman Bob Menendez (D-NJ) — leaders in their respective parties — as well. I led this spirited discussion, which focused on one of the most emotionally charged issues facing our nation today.

We didn't create sweeping legislation to reform our broken federal immigration system — yet we did something equally important that is unfortunately all too rare in Washington. We held a bipartisan conversation — as Republicans and Democrats, as policy leaders with differing ideological persuasions — during which we shared our opinions, listened (yes, listened!) and learned. In fact, education and conversation was the goal of the entire conference — one I think we achieved. I have played a leadership role in this conference, which is sponsored by the U.S.-Mexico Chamber of Commerce, for the past nine years. We aim to educate federal policymakers about the issues plaguing the border region — issues that have the potential to affect our country as a whole. For example, as a nation, we cannot afford to continually underfund border security or reimbursements for healthcare providers in the border region who provide care for undocumented individuals. Moreover, we can no longer abide by a broken federal immigration policy.

In this day-long program, officials and experts from both the U.S. and Mexico addressed an audience of bipartisan members of Congress, Congressional staffers, and other interested individuals. We held two panel discussions — the morning panel focused on water scarcity and health and included panelists such as the El Paso Water Utilities' CEO Ed Archuleta and leaders of the Pan American Health Organization and the United States-Mexico Foundation for Science.

El Paso native Al Martinez-Fonts, who is the Private Sector Liaison at the Department of Homeland Security, gave the keynote address during the luncheon. The afternoon panel followed the Immigration Roundtable with Rep. Dreier, Rep. Menendez, Dobbs and Murguia. This panel focused on the need to strike a balance between security and the free flow of trade at our ports of entry. Individuals testifying included experts with the Department of Homeland Security's US-VISIT program and the International Bank of Commerce. Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) wrapped up the day as the keynote speaker at our closing reception, stressing the need to create a fair and strong federal immigration policy.

For the ninth year in a row, this conference has educated policymakers about the U.S.-Mexico border region — something I have worked hard to do throughout my career in Congress. With a dialogue that was both spirited and insightful, we presented ideas and suggestions that will help shape federal policies affecting both our region and the nation.

"IF CHRISTO WANTED TO DO A REALLY WORTHWHILE ART PROJECT, HE'D COME COVER SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA IN PLASTIC!"

Eye on D.C. By U.S. Rep. Henry Bonilla

The touch of agriculture

I had a meeting the other day with some folks from the Texas Farm Bureau. They're a great group of people and I always look forward to talking with them. In our meetings, we discuss everything from the price of livestock to the latest cotton regulations to foot and mouth disease. An interesting point was brought up in our last discussion. Does the American public realize how often agriculture touches their daily lives?

It's not something we think about every day. You probably don't get up in the morning, put on your clothes, and consider who raised the sheep for your wool pants or who grew the cotton for your shirt. When we get to the breakfast table, we often forget about the corn that was harvested for our morning bowl of cereal or the cows milked for our tall glass of calcium. When our children arrive at school, we seldom think about the school lunch program they are provided each day. Nor do we think about the vaccinations that keep them safe from disease. And when we stop at the grocery store on our way home, how often do we take for granted the high quality of the products we purchase. The produce and meat are fresh, and the aisles packed with availability and variety. Not many countries have this type of luxury.

I make this point because it's important we understand how fortunate we are to have a safe and successful agriculture industry. Agriculture affects so many aspects of our lives. Beyond food and clothing, the agriculture industry accounts for one in every six U.S. jobs. Farmers and ranchers are not the only people working for this huge industry. Agriculture supports your neighbor who works at the clothing production plant, your friend who manages the local grocery store and even your family pharmacist.

No doubt about it — agriculture fuels our economy. The agriculture industry accounts for two percent of our nation's gross domestic product. It also accounts for $50 billion in exports each year. Let's not forget that farmers pay incredible sums of money to cover their business expenses. In recent years, farmers paid as much as $73 billion in purchases and over $25 billion in employee wages.

When you add up the products, the jobs and the economic advantages you can come to just one conclusion: the agriculture industry is literally the backbone of our country. This was true when the founding fathers met in Philadelphia, it was true during the industrial revolution of the 1800s, and it is still true today.

So the next time you're in the grocery store picking out apples or at a department store selecting a new shirt, think about the time and energy invested in every product you see. We may take these things for granted, but for thousands of people nation-wide these items are truly a necessity of life. Let's be thankful for our agriculture industry and for the men and women who work hard every day to keep it strong.

Every County department will have a display or exhibit of the work it performs, including the Medical Examiner, Elections, Public Defender, Child Advocacy, Child Welfare, Sheriff's, County Attorney, District Attorney,

Some departments will hold raffles, such as the Purchasing Department, which will raffle off an Epson 850 printer, a Dell jukebox and a personal organizer, calculators and more.

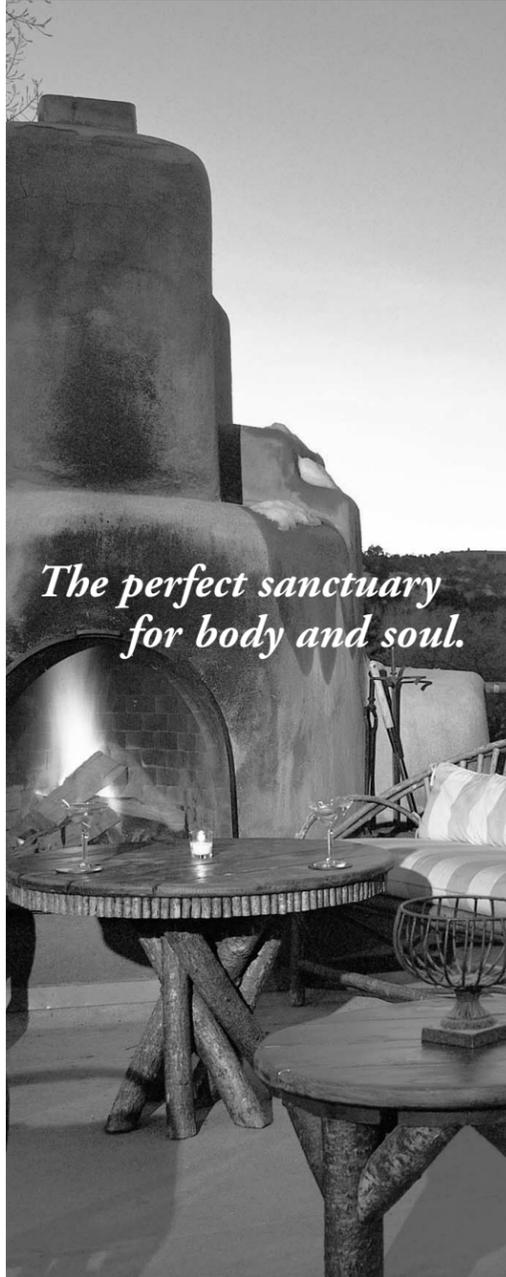

Ben Murillo, a teacher at Tornillo High School, who attended last year's Open House along with 30 of his senior government students, described the event as "critical for young people to understand how their County government works."

"Government teachers don't have that much time to teach their students about city or county government," Murillo said. "We mainly concentrate on federal government and state. By coming to the Open House they were able to learn volumes about the County in one day."

El Paso County's Open House celebration is free to the public and everybody is invited.

made. But just filling out the form is not enough, Dr. Allen said. The form and your decisions should be discussed with your physician and included in your medical record. And the person who will represent you in those decisions also needs a copy of the form.

A third form is helpful for individuals in nursing homes, assisted living, or at home. It is called the Do-Not-Resuscitate Out-of-Hospital form. This is critical if one does not want extraordinary measures being used by paramedics responding to an emergency call.

"Other situations fall to parents to make decisions for their minor children," Dr. Allen noted. "Such as those born with birth defects so severe the infant will never survive without continuous medical intervention. Or any of the accidents that children and teenagers suffer that can be so critical as to be life threatening."

To read more about all three forms and to download them, go to www.texmed.org/directive. "Print out the information, read it, study it, discuss it with your family, and fill out the forms," Dr. Allen said. "Promise yourself, and your family, that you will fulfill this responsibility within a week. Why on earth wouldn't you?"

Congressman Silvestre Reyes voted in favor of the $81.4 billion bill, which in large part funds the Department of Defense for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Funding is also included to assist in reconstruction efforts in regions of South Asia devastated by last year's tsunami. The Emergency Supplemental includes:

- $22 million for a new barracks for soldiers who are mobilizing and demobilizing out of Fort Bliss for Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom;
- $47 million for site preparation and utility work at Biggs Army Airfield (roads, water, sewers, and electricity) for the 3,800 new soldiers coming to Fort Bliss, many of whom will be returning from Iraq beginning in April.;
- $134 million for the construction and procurement of temporary buildings at Biggs Army Airfield to accommodate the new soldiers; and
- $91 million for 90 Army Tactical Missile System (ATACMS) missiles, which are assembled at the Lockheed Martin plant in Horizon City. These will replace missiles used in Iraq. "Fort Bliss and El Paso are anticipating up to 10,000 new people with this new influx of soldiers," said Reyes. "Moreover, these soldiers will start arriving beginning in April and next year's funds will not be available soon enough to meet El Paso's impending needs."

■ The Business Express Loan Fair, March 30, will help small business owners learn about and apply for unsecured business loans from $5,000 to $25,000. The SBA's Community Express Loan Program was designed to provide financial and critical technical assistance to the small business market to make growth capital more available. The fair begins at 4 p.m. at the Center for Workforce Preparedness Building located at 1359 Lomaland Drive, El Paso, Texas. Interested individuals can meet with representatives on a one-on-one, come and go basis.

■ There is a need for host families in the El Paso County area for international exchange students, ages 15 to 18, for the upcoming semester or school year. From a variety of countries and cultures, these students are English-speaking, have own spending money and health insurance. To learn more about these programs or to schedule an interview with a representative, call Pacific Intercultural Exchange at 1-800-631-1818 or ASSE international Student Exchange Program at 1-800-473-0696.

McGwire's performance before Congress anything but Major League

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

I must admit it was riveting television, but at the same time it was very difficult to watch. One of the most anticipated sights in all of sports over the last 10 years has been watching baseball slugger Mark McGwire step into the batter's box and wave that huge piece of lumber at an opposing pitcher.

All of us stopped what we were doing for those two or three minutes until Big Mac either struck out, flied out, or hit it about 450 feet into the stands. We'd stare at the ball as it continued on its flight with our mouths open wondering where he got the power to hit it that far. Last week, we found out.

It was very difficult for many people to watch McGwire do everything, but invoke his Fifth Amendment rights, in an attempt to avoid answering questions from a congressional committee concerning steroid use in Major League Baseball.

While Rafael Palmeiro defiantly pointed his finger at the group saying he had never taken steroids or any other kind of human growth supplements, McGwire simply took the coward's way out and refused to answer the question — looking more like a guilty mortal than an American hero.

I have very few heroes in professional sports anymore, but I must admit that of the few, McGwire was one — and I must say it again — he was one.

I have absolutely no doubt that he is sincere when he talks about wanting to be involved in trying to fix the problem for the many young men and women out there who believe a better body through chemistry is the only way to make it to the big time.

I do believe that a person who has a certain problem can sometimes be the best qualified to help others with that same problem. But how can McGwire help others if he isn't even willing to come clean about his own involvement?

A lot of people lost a lot of respect for McGwire last week. It doesn't mean he can't get it back, but it starts with being a man and being honest. Americans respect a man who makes a mistake and then admits it, takes responsibility for it, and then goes out and does whatever he can to fix it.

What Americans despise are lawyers, politicians, business owners and baseball players who dance around the question because they think the ample amount of money in their pockets allows them certain law-breaking privileges the rest of us lack.

At one point in the questioning, a committee member asked McGwire if he thought taking steroids was cheating. McGwire, who fielded the question as well as Canseco once fielded a fly ball off his head, actually answered, "that's not for me to determine."

Excuse me? McGwire couldn't even admit that taking steroids is cheating? He started his day in front of the committee with an opening statement that talked about how he was concerned with kids getting involved with steroids.

And now he can't even tell America's children that using steroids is cheating. How incredibly sad this one-time hero now is.

Hear that whistling sound? That's the sound of more McGwire respect escaping into thin air.

And while McGwire performed dreadfully, damaging his reputation beyond repair, he wasn't the only person who left the hearing smelling like Martha Stewart.

MLB commissioner Bud Selig and player representative Donald Fehr looked just as foolish, trying to double-speak their way through the verbal minefields set up by the committee members.

Selig told the committee he didn't think the problem was as big as they were making it out to be. Fehr, when asked if it was true that under the current agreement players could break the law (take steroids) four times before receiving a lifetime ban, answered "yes."

The amazing thing is that these two men had absolutely no clue how ridiculous they looked, and it wasn't difficult to see that they didn't even care.

It wasn't very hard to see that Mark McGwire was the biggest loser in these hearings. But professional baseball wasn't far behind.

In the end, what did we learn from the hearings? We learned that MLB is dishonest, disreputable and extremely arrogant.

We learned one other thing, we now know how Big Mac got super-sized.

Smashing

that night. His diminutive, benign frame exploded with energy and force each time he smashed those things together, rattling his arms, his teeth and the floor. I was envious.

But the one fellow who kept me the most curious was seated at the far right front of the stage. He didn't participate at all — other than to scratch his nose and bob his head to the music — for so long that I decided he must be security. Until the finale.

As the cymbals clashed, the brass screamed, the harp throbbed, the drums rolled, the gong thundered, the violas wept, and the cellos roared, he rose to do his part.

Standing almost unnoticed near the front edge of the stage was a narrow rack hung with chimes almost as tall as he was. He stood in front of them and, with authority and gusto, struck them resoundingly with a mallet in each hand. The chimes reverberated into the crescendo with each blow.

He struck again, three times, four, and then...

I watched in amazement as the rack, moved by the force of each blow, simply took a nose dive, right off the stage, crashing into the empty chairs directly below, striking some unplanned and unanticipated chords.

Our man was cool to the end, though. After the initial shocked expression, he simply clasped his hands over his mallets and stood waiting for the end to come.

All in all, I thought it was a smashing performance.

Making sure crime pays

By Don Flood

While Martha Stewart's recent stay in the Big House has proven to be a public-relations bonanza, experts warn that success in the business world isn't as simple as saying, "I have a prison record."

Stewart was found guilty last year of obstruction of justice and lying to investigators in a case involving insider trading. Instead of filing appeals, Stewart elected to begin serving her term, the result, naturally, being a big boost to her image and to her home-decorating empire.

The key here is insider trading, which is a high-class crime, as is obvious from the name itself. A person guilty of insider trading must be an "insider," and therefore a good candidate to lead a major corporation.

But others hoping to emulate Stewart's success should remember that not all crimes are "career-builders."

Good: Defrauding thousands of shareholders.

Bad: Knocking over a 7-Eleven.

But what of the person just starting out, someone who hasn't had the opportunities to engage in high-level crimes?

According to experts, it's a question of putting your worst foot forward.

When asked the common interview question, "What do you expect to be doing five years from now?" for example, the alert job candidate can smoothly reply, "I hope to be behind bars."

Another way to hide a clean record is to lie. Job applications usually ask if the person has been convicted of a crime in the past seven years. Simply answer "yes."

Surprisingly, many employers will not even bother to check. They'll take you at your word, allowing you to invent an impressive, if false, life of crime.

The beauty of this ploy is you can make it work for you even if you are found out.

EMPLOYER: I'm sorry, but we looked into your background and found no evidence of any criminal record.

JOB APPLICANT: Of course. I lied. In fact, that whole job application is nothing but a pack of lies.

Not as impressive as a real crime, perhaps, but it shows the right attitude.

Special note: These tips do not apply to all careers.

A successful country music singer, for example, requires a criminal record, but the bar is set much lower. In fact, the more aimless and pathetic the crime the better.

Good: Slashing the tires of ex-girlfriend.

Bad: Stealing famous paintings.

In the absence of a criminal record, aspiring country music singers may, as a fallback, check themselves into a rehab center, whether or not they actually have drug or alcohol problems.

Likewise, ambitious young rap singers should be sure to have drug and gang activity as part of their resume, with gun-related crimes a major plus.

Rumors of having shot or murdered people are good for street cred, but potential rappers should be aware of the challenge of pursuing a music career while serving a long-term prison sentence.

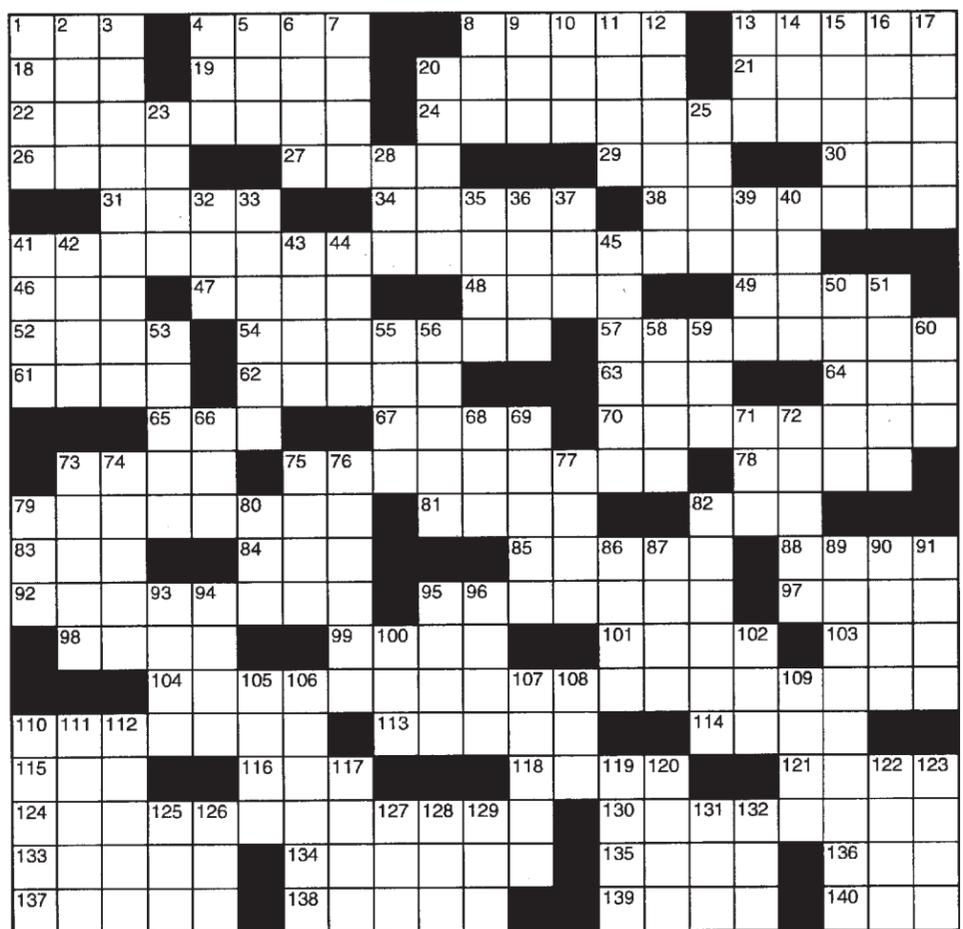

Public-relations experts recommend a five- or six-month term, such as Martha Stewart's — enough to generate maximum publicity but not so long as to risk being forgotten.

And remember, it's not your fault you came from a good background, but it is your fault if you don't do anything about it.

Answer Page 6

Social Security Q&A By Ray Vigil

Q: My company's pension plan benefits are based on my last five years of earnings. Are my Social Security benefits figured the same way?

A: No. Retirement benefit calculations are based on your average earnings during a lifetime of work under the Social Security system. For most current and future retirees, we will average your 35 highest years of earnings. Years in which you have low earnings or no earnings may be counted to bring the total years of earnings up to 35.

Q: I stopped work at the end of last year, when I was 52. I don't expect to work again, and will probably file for Social Security retirement benefits when I turn 62. Will I still get the same benefit amount that is shown on the Social Security Statement that I recently received?

A: Probably not. When Social Security calculated your 35 highest years of earnings to estimate your future benefits on your Statement, there was an assumption that you would continue to work until age 62, making the same earnings you made last year. If, instead, you have zero earnings each year over the next 10 years, your average earnings will probably be less and so will your benefit.

Q: The Internal Revenue Service has sent me a letter saying money for overdue taxes may be taken from my Social Security payments. Does Social Security allow that?

A: If you owe overdue taxes to the IRS, money can be taken from your Social Security payments, reducing your payments by as much as 15 percent a month. However, before this would happen, you would get a letter from Social Security explaining how and why your benefits are being reduced.

Q: My insurance agent told me that I should consider buying disability insurance. But I remember hearing that I already have some disability insurance protection through Social Security. Would a private policy offset any of the Social Security disability benefit I would be eligible for?

A: No. Neither your eligibility for, nor the amount of your Social Security disability payments, is affected by any private insurance you may buy. But worker's compensation and some public disability payments may affect your Social Security benefit.

For more information visit your local Social Security office, see www.ssa.gov or call us at 1-800-772-1213. If you have any questions that you would like to have answered, please mail them to the Social Security Office, 1111 Gateway West, Attn: Ray Vigil, El Paso, Texas 79935.

AGRICULTURE

High pressure will control the weather Thursday and bring sunshine along with mild temperatures. An upper-level disturbance will cross the area Friday and may bring a brief shower, but any rain will be under 0.20 of an inch. Sunny and windy conditions will be the rule for Saturday. Expect a gradual warming trend early next week.
