Clarke Middle student is a world-renowned BMX racer

By Carlos A. Briano
Special to the Courier

EAST EL PASO COUNTY — Capt. Walter E. Clarke Middle School eighth grader Fernie Jacquez has broken his arm three times, separated his shoulder twice, broken his foot twice and has had two hematomas as a result of jumping 10 and 30-foot jumps on his BMX bike. But for Jacquez, his love of racing keeps him going back for more.

"It's the best thing in the world," he says. "BMX is a fun sport to get into if you're a person that likes to ride bikes, have fun, meet new people, travel the country and be dedicated to something for a long time."

Jacquez is dedicated to his sport. He's been racing for seven years after first being exposed to BMX by his older step-brother.

"He would always send me postcards of him racing so I thought it might be cool to try," Jacquez says. "I was six years old when I started. The first year I started racing I ended up winning the biggest race of the year, the ABA Grand."

His success didn't stop there. Jacquez has been ranked number one in the world in the 12X age group, finished second in the World Championships in Ontario, Calif. and has been ranked in the top five in the world in different age groups. But his ultimate goal is to eventually become a professional racer. And according to his trainers, that is a very real possibility.

WORLD ACCLAIM — Capt. Walter E. Clarke Middle School eighth grader Fernie Jacquez is world-renowned BMX racer besides being an all-around good student.

"Fernie can become a pro by the time he is 16; that's how much talent he has," says Jacquez' trainer Fernie Muñoz II. "He has been ranked number one in the nation in his class in 2004 and has always stayed in the top five."

Jacquez is already a sponsored racer. As a member of the California-based racing team Intense BMX Phantom Ontrac, Jacquez's airfare, hotel, race entry fees, bike and racing gear are paid for by companies like Intense BMX Frames, Phantom Race Components, On Trac Garage Door Company, THE Products, SINZ Racing Products, Intense BMX Tires, Fly Race Wear, Answer and APS. This allows him to race throughout the country.

"They sponsor fast riders so their stuff gets promoted," Jacquez says. "Fans see us wearing the stuff and they want to go out and buy it. So basically it's a bunch of promotion."

Even though Jacquez is quite intense about his riding, he is also a well-rounded student-athlete. He plays on the Clarke football and baseball teams and is an AB student in the National Junior Honor Society. He also represented Clarke at the state science fair with a project focusing on different gear ratios to examine the possibility of gaining revolutions in BMX racing.

"Fernie is one of our most popular, outgoing and well-rounded students," says Kirk Macon, Clarke library media technician. "It's amazing that he finds time to BMX. Fernie is a good example of the kind of student we like to help develop here at Clarke."

SEHS Library Awarded National Book Grant

SAN ELIZARIO — The San Elizario High School library was one of 2000 libraries across the nation to receive the "Becoming American" Bookshelf, a National Endowment for the Humanities and American Library Association collaborative that encourages young people to read classic books and explore themes in American history, culture, and ideas. School and public libraries were invited to apply for the 15 thematically related books, which embody the theme of "Becoming American."

"This is important for us because we do have so many new Americans in the community," said Gloria Fogerson, SEHS Librarian. "These people in our community can learn from these stories and teach by sharing their own experiences."

With titles such as The Lotus Seed by Sherry Garland, Dragonwings by Laurence Yep, Immigrant Kids by Russell Freedman, Barrio Boy by Ernesto Galarza, and Giants in the Earth: A Saga of the Prairie by Ole Edvart R'lvaa, students will be able to read great stories of newfound American ideals through the words of writers from different cultural backgrounds.

Fogerson said that the books should arrive on campus during the first week of April and

One perspective

By Francis Shrum

Blame game

We've got a problem with our kids being too fat.

for these normal differences — a problem exacerbated by the commercial ideal of an artificially pencil-thin silhouette.

By overweight, I do not mean a nice round kid who eats normally, then runs and plays instead of spending hours in an inert position. Nor do I mean a child with an inherent health problem that is causing abnormal weight gain such as a thyroid related disorder.

The fat factor is so simple, but we like to make it sound complicated. Simply put, a person gains weight when energy intake exceeds energy output. Energy intake is food. According to research into childhood obesity, most obese children don't consume that many more calories than thinner kids. They just don't move as much.

It's a new problem. It's a big problem. So, being Americans, we have to find out who to blame.

There have been a couple of lawsuits lately against some fast food places, McDonald's for one, claiming that they are to blame for the expansion of our national waistline because they provide us with the garbage we love to hate.

Even the company that manufactures Oreos has been sued for serving up cookies that taste too good to resist but are loaded with things like trans-fats.

The realization that we are a nation with a huge and growing number of overweight children is so new and so frightening that we're just now beginning to come to grips with what it may mean to American society.

First off, let me qualify what I mean by an overweight kid. There is a wide natural difference in the way people look due to genetics. BMI (Body Mass Index) and other general measuring tools do not always allow

Even a relatively small imbalance between energy intake and output can lead to significant weight gain over time. That's why it used to be only grown-ups who got fat as a result of this imbalance over the years. But if our kids are getting fat, that means that they aren't moving much at all, even from early childhood, or are consuming an inordinately large amount of fatty food.

Or maybe both?

Obesity in kids is proven to cause

ocular disease, weight-related orthopedic problems, skin disorders and potential psychiatric after-effects from these maladies not to mention peer abuse on the playground.

With these risk factors hovering in the background, huge numbers of kids also start using tobacco in their early teens, compounding the likelihood they may suffer an early death from "natural causes."

America is constantly distracted by more immediate disasters, like Hurricane Katrina and bird flu. But the problem of an unhealthy youth is eating away at our national foundation like termites in a wooden parlor floor. Our insurance companies are quaking in their boots as they consider that the health of the human bodies they are gambling on to keep treat the symptoms. And it is proven that an overweight child will struggle with his or her weight for the rest of their lives, or, worse yet, give up the struggle altogether.

The National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES) has studied weight in kids for decades using measured heights and weights. Their research shows that from about 1960-80, there was little change in the statistics regarding overweight kids. Then something frightening happened. From 1980 to 2002, that statistic more than doubled — to an estimated 16 percent of our youth ages six to 19 being classified overweight — a statistic many health experts say under-represents the problem.

So what happened? Who is to blame? Well, we'd like to say it's the folks who provide us with fatty cookies and burgers and video games and vending machine snacks and sodas and cigarettes. And that's true. They shouldn't be doing that.

But remember — "they" is "us."

Even though we know better than to do it, we smoke. We know we shouldn't, but we eat way too much of all the wrong things. We know we should, but we don't exercise. Instead of finding healthy alternatives, we drown our miseries and discomforts in alcohol and drugs.

That apple still falls not far from the old tree.

health conditions we would never in the past have associated with childhood. They are the kind of problems people don't usually get until they've had years to abuse themselves. Now our kids are dealing with all-too-real monsters under the bed like diabetes, high blood pressure, cardiovas-

Reyes Reports By U.S. Rep. Silvestre Reyes

Get immigration reform right

Our nation's immigration policies, as well as federal proposals for immigration reform, such as HR 4437, have recently been the source of much outrage and concern here in El Paso.

I served for 26 and a half years in the U.S. Border Patrol, and saw firsthand the hypocrisy and failures of our nation's immigration policies, and have long advocated comprehensive immigration reform in Congress. As the only member of Congress with a background in border control, I have worked during my nearly ten years in Congress to educate my colleagues about the fact that our current policies not only do little to honor our legacy as a nation of immigrants, they also threaten our security.

Unfortunately, passage late last year in the House of Representatives of H.R. 4437, the so-called Border Protection, Antiterrorism, and Illegal Immigration Control Act of 2005, did not move us closer to the comprehensive overhaul this nation so desperately needs. It did, however, illustrate that the majority of members of the House of Representatives either have no idea what Congress really needs to do to help keep Americans safe, or are more interested in scoring political points with the voters back home.

For instance, I offered an alternative proposal to HR 4437 on behalf of House Democrats that, unlike H.R. 4437, would have fulfilled and even surpassed the requirements of the bipartisan 9/11 Commission with respect to increases in personnel and equipment necessary to apprehend, process, and deport illegal immigrants. However, none of the 219 Republicans voting supported my measure.

The realities of immigration reform and border enforcement demand far more than proposals for constructing impractical multi-billion dollar border fences, making criminals out of clergy or aid workers who render basic humanitarian assistance to the undocumented, or making the estimated 11 million undocumented immigrants felons.

We need a comprehensive immigration reform plan with three main components: strengthened border security; tough, strictly enforced sanctions against employers who hire undocumented immigrants; and a guestworker program that offers a path to earned legalization for those who are willing to work hard, pay taxes, and participate as productive members of our society.

The bill that was reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee and is currently pending in the Senate is a good-faith effort at fulfilling those three imperatives. For instance, the bill includes a provision allowing immigrants who have been living, working, and raising families in the United States to become full members of our society. As a nation built by immigrants, we should welcome this next generation of immigrants who are seeking the American Dream. At the same time, by bringing the vast majority of the undocumented out of the shadows, law enforcement will be better able to identify the small handful of immigrants who are not here for legitimate reasons, but may instead pose a threat to our security.

Comprehensive, fair immigration reform is long overdue, and public outcry in El Paso and across the country has signaled that our patience is just about up. HR 4437 was unnecessarily mean-spirited and punitive, and did not address the fundamental failures of our immigration policies. I was proud to lead the Democratic opposition to the bill, and find it encouraging that the Senate so far has been moving in a different direction. Enacting legislation similar to the bill reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee would be a step in the right direction toward real border security and immigration reform.

Write stuff

Dear Editor:

Everyone, paying taxes, are at the time of year to finish up paperwork to get a refund or to pay extra because of working long hours for a few extra bucks. We are also in the early stage of earning enough to pay next year's taxes (somewhere around May 21).

Do I feel I need to pay more? Do I have a choice? I would like to think so. There are some out there who want to know what's in my wallet. Do I have a little to invest in my future? Can I take a vacation? Can I take my family out for a special dinner? Do my grown children need some help? If Elliott Shapleigh finds out — watch out.

He has promised to go for a state income tax, increase taxes on family-owned businesses, and to invest igate ways to find even more money for the state and its various bureaucracies. He'll do this but will lower our property tax, yeah right!! I know the line — it will only be on the rich.

I, for one, am voting for Dee Margo in November and preserving some of my personal control.

What's in your wallet?

Canutillo ISD school board approves new associate superintendent

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

CANUTILLO — Canutillo ISD Board of Trustees approved recently the administration's recommendation to name Pauline Dow to the newly created position of associate superintendent for the district.

Pauline Dow

In her new position, Dow will work directly under Dr. Pam Padilla, who was named CISD superintendent in January. The creation of the new associate superintendent position falls in line with the administrative reorganization plan that was proposed by the new superintendent and approved by the school board in February.

"Pauline has the knowledge and expertise to support the District's mission and goals at all levels," said Dr. Padilla. "She understands the nature of the changes that this district is experiencing and will be able to leverage resources in creative ways to consistently improve educational opportunities

El Paso County Tornillo Water Improvement District NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

The El Paso County Tornillo Water Improvement District (EPCTWID) proposes to construct a wastewater collection system and treatment plant under the Environmental Distressed Areas Program (EDAP) for the Town of Tornillo. The cost for the EDAP portion of the project is estimated to be $10.8M. The cost for the BEIF portion of the project is estimated to be $5.75M. The total estimated cost of the project is $16.55M. A public hearing on the project will be held at 6:00 p.m. on May 17, 2006, at the Tornillo High School Cafeteria, 300 Oil Mill, Tornillo, Texas. The major purpose of this hearing is to discuss project changes and estimated monthly sewer and water bills for the EPCTWID customers. The average estimated monthly residential sewer bill will be $24.00 and the average estimated monthly water bill will be $37.05.

The EDAP Phase I Study and the Environmental Information Document (EID) facility plan were completed and funded by the Texas Water Development Board (TWDB) EDAP Program. The EDAP portion of the project involves construction of approximately 33,700 linear feet wastewater collection piping, manholes, service connections, lift stations, and a 0.35 MGD wastewater treatment plant. Project construction locations include public right-of-ways and small parcels of private lands purchased within the Town of Tornillo. The areas to be served include all residential ratepayers within the EDAP eligible area of the town.

Additional financial assistance for the project is also being sought from EPA Border Environmental Infrastructure Fund (BEIF) administered by the NADBank for the areas that are ineligible under the EDAP program. The NADBank portion of the project involves the construction of approximately 22,000 linear feet wastewater collection piping, manholes, and service connections. Project construction locations will be in public right-of-ways. The areas to be served by the proposed facilities include residential ratepayers in Ranchitos subdivision and some portions of the Drake subdivision. The proposed plant under the EDAP project will be expanded to an additional 0.34 MGD for this phase. The total treatment capacity of the plant for both phases will be sized to 0.75 MGD.

Written comments on the proposed project may be sent to El Paso County Tornillo Water Improvement District, P.O. Box 136, Tornillo, TX 79853, or to the Texas Water Development Board, P.O. Box 13231 Capitol Station, Austin, TX 78711-3231.

SISD Athletic Director first in El Paso to receive national certification

By Carlos A. Briano
Special to the Courier

EAST EL PASO COUNTY —
Ron Leiman, Socorro ISD's Athletic

Director, has successfully completed the process to claim the title of "Certified Master Athletic Administrator" with the National Interscholastic Athletic Administrators Association. "This certification has been 17 years in the making," Leiman says. "And I am very pleased that SISD has afforded me the opportunity to serve athletic administration at various levels during the past eight years."

The certification process included a thorough evaluation of Leiman's educational background, experience NIAAA Leadership Courses and professional contributions, culminating with a practical written project. Leiman is the first athletic director in El Paso and one of 10 in Texas to attain this level of certification. Only about 220 athletic directors hold this certification nationwide.

"As the chairperson of the NIAAA Certification Committee I am proud of Ron," says Scott Lindgren. "I think he is an outstanding athletic administrator who is committed to SISD students and their education."

Many Socorro ISD coaches are not surprised about Leiman's newest accomplishment, as they have been the beneficiaries of his leadership.

"I have known Ron Leiman for many years and he provided the opportunity for me to change careers and become a coach," says Socorro High cross country coach Jeff Barros. "His leadership skills and support has helped me become the best coach that I can."

"Mr. Leiman is always looking for new and innovative ways to improve our athletic programs," adds El Dorado High swim coach John Haddox Jr. "The local status quo is not good enough and he is always trying to bring us up to the standards of the best programs in the state."

■ Americas High School junior Nickolas Widtfeldt has been selected from over 1,700 students worldwide to attend the United States Air Force Academy's Summer Seminar program for 2006. The selection process is highly competitive with only the top students being offered a slot for this prestigious program. For the selection criteria, the Academy uses a "total person" concept that is based on a student's academic achievement, athletic abilities, leadership skills and desire to pursue a career in the Air Force. Each year, the Admissions Directorate and Dean of Faculty jointly host the Summer Seminar program, which gives high school students the opportunity to experience the environment at the Air Force Academy. Summer Seminar is one of the Academy's top recruiting programs and the students' agenda includes academic workshops along with some military and physical training scenarios.

You can live in Bond's world if you can take it

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

Shame on ESPN. I have to admit that I'm just like all the other sports guys who tune in to ESPN every day to see what's going on in the world of athletics. I check out ESPN's coverage of pro and college sports, their documentaries, their talk shows, and their presentations of classic contests, but there is one ESPN program I just refuse to watch — Bonds on Bonds. Yes, ESPN has entered the reality show business and this is about as bad as it gets. This is a show where the San Francisco Giants' chemically-enhanced slugger, Barry Bonds, is followed around the clubhouse, on the field, anywhere Barry does whatever Barry does.

The intent of the program is to show the general public who the real Barry Bonds is. You know, showing Bonds do everything except pulling steroids out of his pocket. You couldn't pay me enough money to watch this ridiculous attempt at entertainment. But I did hear some excerpts from the first show and you guessed it — there was Barry Bonds complaining about how the media and fans are all against him.

It got so bad that the hulking Bonds started to weep, to cry. He sounded frighteningly like Michael Jackson as he went on about those evil people who don't believe his side of the story.

His voice would break, he'd cry a little and then he'd snuffle, and then he'd have the f-word bleeped. He cried a little more, sniffled, and then had the f-word bleeped again.

I mean, it was like listening to a strange morphing of Tammy Faye Baker and George Carlin, cry a little — cuss a little — cry a little — cuss a little.

The more I heard Barry cry the more I wanted to laugh. It was hilarious. Talk about turning it on in front of the camera. It was both hilarious and sadly embarrassing.

I expect the phony behavior from Barry Bonds — the man is a walking lie. But ESPN should be ashamed of itself for even coming up with this stupid idea of a reality show.

The only reality about the show is — well — OK, maybe there is no reality in this reality show. But it will sell because it does feature a huge star. A star so big now that his hat size is beginning to rival his belt size.

Lacrossing the line

One of things that sports fans love to do the most is boo Duke University, especially in basketball.

Duke kind of gives off this "we are so much more superior than you" attitude that turns off most fans.

And though it was fun to watch Duke lose in the NCAA tournament, it's been a lot less joyful hearing the daily updates about the Blue Devils' Lacrosse team.

As you should have heard by now the team's season has been cancelled due to the alleged sexual assault by some members of the team on an exotic dancer who performed at a private party in an off-campus residence.

On one side, the stripper said she was essentially gang raped and beaten by certain members of the team, and on the other side, the attorney for the players says everyone will owe his clients an apology when DNA results prove them innocent.

So far we know one thing, someone is telling the truth and someone is lying — plain and simple.

But I'll tell you this, it certainly doesn't help the players' cause when it was learned that about a third of the team has already been in trouble, being charged with misdemeanors stemming from drunken and disruptive behavior in the past three years.

Then, in a most disturbing and vile twist, an e-mail found on the computer of one of the players revealed a side to him that was downright sickening.

In the e-mail addressed "to whom it may concern," he writes that he has "decided to have some strippers over" to his dorm room, "however there will be no nudity. I plan on killing (them) as soon as they walk in and proceeding to cut their skin off."

He then goes on to express that, to him, the act would be ... satisfying. He signed the e-mail by his jersey number.

Now being stupid, vulgar and repulsive doesn't necessarily mean a rape has been committed. But anyone who thinks like that has got some serious issues.

And if it swims, quacks and acts like a grotesque duck ...

Cameras improve, but why stop there?

By Don Flood

To the best of my knowledge, Brad and Angelina are not married. Or, if they are married by now, they are not divorced yet. I just wanted to get that out there because I've seen headlines that say, in effect: "Brad and Angelina did not get married today."

We're talking major celebrities here. Your run-of-the-mill celebrity has to do something to make news, which is why they resort to phone throwing or public tantrums or, like Lindsay Lohan and Billy Joel, regularly scheduled car accidents.

Only a rarified few are able to generate press coverage for not doing something — though heaven knows, Congress tries — which shows just how lucky we are to be living in the Age of Brad and Angelina.

(A recent survey, however, revealed that four out of five historians prefer the term Age of Brangelina. "It's cute and fun to say. Brangelina, Brangelina, Brangelina. I just can't get enough of it," said one Harvard professor, who has taught graduate-level courses on both Brangelina and Bennifer, though the latter, which deals with Ben Affleck and Jennifer Lopez, is now part of the school's Ancient History curriculum.)

But today's topic — and I'll get to it when I'm good and ready — is about the great new camera that makes people look thinner.

(Also, as a public service, I will periodically interrupt this column for the latest reports from BNS, the Brangelina News Service.)

Finally, camera manufacturers are starting to get it. People don't care about being thin. They just want to look thin in pictures.

But why stop with weight? My ideal camera would add a few inches, subtract a few years, ditch the glasses, add some hair, etc.

THIS JUST IN: Brad and Angelina are reported to be wearing shoes today. No word yet on color, style, make or heel height. In fact, they might be wearing sandals.

But why bother with cameras at all? Let's just buy pictures of good-looking people and pass them off as our own.

This makes even more sense as people meet and continue relationships online.

THIS JUST IN: Brad and Angelina reportedly did not get their hair cut yesterday. Sources were unable to specify whether this had anything to do with their impending marriage and/or divorce.

One thing that social scientists agree on is that most online relationship problems develop after people meet.

Before they meet, they're happy. Their new love is perfect and never suffers from body odor, not that they can tell.

THIS JUST IN: According to the latest reports, Brad and Angelina are expected to eat breakfast "sometime tomorrow." Plans to have lunch and dinner, while considered likely by many close to the story, remain unconfirmed.

And as long as they remain an online couple, they can continue to exchange their innermost thoughts and dreams, along with drop-dead gorgeous pictures, which they can show off to their friends and family.

Actually, I don't know why people haven't embarked on online marriages. It might even be a good idea for Brangelina.
