School leaders ask for fair funding

By Gustavo Reveles

EL PASO COUNTY — Five El Paso County Superintendents asked for fairness in school funding during a series of meetings with state lawmakers and education officials at the state capitol last week.

The superintendents — El Paso ISD's Lorenzo García, Ysleta ISD's Michael Zolkoski, Clint ISD's Edward Gabaldon, Canutillo ISD's Damon Murphy and Tornillo ISD's Paul Vranish — told legislators that the proposed cuts in state funding would severely hamper their ability to keep current staffing levels and retain successful academic programs.

The Texas House of Representatives has adopted a budget that cut $23 billion, including severe cuts to public education.

The superintendents said their visit to Austin was meant to share their thoughts on this and other funding propositions for school districts.

"The superintendents came here carrying a message to Austin that the next level of cuts will be detrimental to the instructional progress of the community and the economic progress of El Paso," EPISD's García said.

The five superintendents met with El Paso-area state representatives Naomi Gonzalez, Chente Quintanilla, Dee Margo and Joe Pickett, as well as state Sen. José Rodríguez.

They also met with state Rep. Rob Eisler, the chairman of the House Committee on Public Education and Texas Education Commissioner Robert Scott.

During the meetings, the educators asked state legislators to make education a priority and to reduce the cuts slated to affect school districts.

"It's our duty to come and share the specifics of how exactly the actions that take place in Austin will affect the children of our school districts," Tornillo's Vranish said. "We are here to arm them with the information they need to make a decision."

Canutillo's Murphy said the meetings were productive and that the legislators were receptive about their concerns.

"But we remain greatly guarded about the current funding situation," he added.

Clint's Gabaldon said the meeting was meant to show a united

Texas ranks last in the percentage of adults with a high school diploma

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

EL PASO COUNTY — Jobs of the past, the ones that didn't require a high school diploma, have decreased as many of those companies have left the El Paso area. Today's local businesses need a worker who is fluent in English and has at least a high school diploma, according to local workforce officials.

Business companies weigh the education statistics when they consider a move to El Paso, stated Ernst Roberts, executive assistant to the president of El Paso Community College.

"When they look at the demographics of our region, the sad thing is that they see the low educational attainment levels, and that is a disincentive for them to relocate here," Roberts stated in a recent newspaper report.

"If El Paso is to become a player, one of the things that we must do is to provide to those companies an educated work force that can respond to their needs," Roberts stated.

The reality is that just 23.5 percent of workers in El Paso County 25 years or older have a high school diploma or equivalent.

Statewide, a quarter of the population has graduated from high school. When compared to the rest of the nation, Texas ranks last in the percentage of adults with a high school diploma, according to a study released recently by a panel of Texas legislators.

The biennial study, "Texas on the Brink", compared Texas with the rest of the country based on various functions including public education and taxing among other measures.

Another statistic that the study reported is that Texas ranks near last in the amount of state and local money spent per student in public schools.

Despite the low rankings, Texas lawmakers are currently considering proposals that would cut more than $11 billion from the public education budget.

To Steve Murdock, a former U.S. Census Bureau director and past state demographer, education is the best predictor of income levels. And according to Murdock, ignoring the state's education woes could lead to increased costs and poorer communities.

Murdock stated that if the state implements the proposed cuts to

Veterans Post By Freddy Groves

A shot that stops PTSD

Back in 2008, I wrote about a possible “shot” to treat Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. At the time it was called a stellate ganglion block.

Doctors knew that in PTSD, something called nerve growth factor is produced during a traumatic event. That NGF would send out “roots” from the site in the brain, making anxiety worse than ever as even more roots grew, feeding on the new anxiety. The sufferer lived in a perpetual state of mental turmoil, with the “fight or flight” response at full speed. For most, the anti-anxiety prescriptions haven’t worked well.

In the “shot” treatment, anesthesia is injected into a certain spot in the neck, stopping the growth – and the anxiety – cold. At the time, initial results were promising.

The wheels of science (and research funding) move slowly, but now this “shot” procedure has a name: the Chicago Block.

A Chicago pain doctor, Dr. Eugene Lipov of the non-profit

Chicago Medical Innovations, developed the procedure for menopause (hey, we don’t care where it came from, right?) and learned that it also works on PTSD. All of his patients have had relief within a half hour. Some patients experience relief for a few months, after which they need a second shot. Others have had relief for two years. Sufferers can be weaned off their other PTSD medications.

Now there’s real forward progress: The Naval Medical Center in San Diego (Capt. Anita Hickey) is about to start a formal study of the procedure.

If you want to learn how the block works, go to chicagomedicalinnovations.org to watch a video of the procedure and read the Frequently Asked Questions.

ON THE EDGE – Non-profit organizations, like Communities In Schools (CIS), would be significantly impacted if state lawmakers approve proposed education budget cuts. CIS offers social and academic services to at-risk students in El Paso County schools to help them stay in school. Shown in photo above is a CIS staffer and students participating in an after school activity.

the state’s education system, the average Texas household in 2040 would be at least $6,500 poorer than it was in 2000, and about 30 percent of workers would not have a high school diploma.

“We’re talking about not doing improvements and going back the other way. That’s not staying stable, that’s dropping it lower,” Murdock told members of the House Mexican American legislative Caucus recently.

At the local level, the proposed budget cuts to education would have a significant impact, and school districts are bracing for the worst. Area districts are eliminating jobs, freezing salaries, and asking voters to approve tax rate increases to meet their financial needs.

Non-profit organizations, like

Communities In Schools (CIS) that offer social and academic services to at-risk students in El Paso County schools, are being hit even harder.

CIS is the state’s leading dropout prevention program for at-risk students and the only such program that both increases graduation rates and decreases dropout rates, according to a recent Texas Education Agency report.

In El Paso, CIS served over 8,200 students in three local school districts and reported a 99 percent success rate in keeping these students in school in 2009.

Nonetheless, CIS stands to lose over 76 percent of its state funding under the currently proposed education budget cuts. The proposed cuts would force CIS to lay-off about 700 of its 1,445 professional staff members, eliminate at least 350 of the 865 campuses served by CIS personnel, and deny services to over 45,000 of the 89,000 students enrolled in CIS programs statewide.

“This level of budget cuts will harshly affect schools and programs such as CIS,” stated Robert Shaw, executive director for CIS-El Paso. “Our program coordinators are faced daily with the reality of working with these students and their families regardless of any budgetary constraints that may come our way... CIS and its mission to keep students in school will continue.”

State Representative Alma Allen, a former teacher and principal, stated in a recent newspaper article that she was disappointed that Texas ranked 44th nationally in the amount of state and local money spent per student in public schools.

“As an educator, I’m appalled. The rest of the country is moving forward and Texas children are being left behind,” Allen stated. She added that the proposed budget cuts will only exacerbate the problem.

effort on behalf of the education leaders of Region 19.

“We all have been working individually to deal with the expected cuts,” he said. “But it was extremely important for us to show a collective effort in order to leverage as much influence as possible on behalf of our children.”

Ysleta’s Zolkoski said he hoped the visit pays off in the end.

“After all, the legislators and the superintendents have the same goal in mind, to serve the children of the El Paso region,” he said. “We all want to fight for the children of the border.”

Passing better laws

Hola mi gente. Legislating is like any other endeavor where other people can inject their ideas or opinions – compromise is part of the game. In this case, there is no such thing as the perfect bill.

At this point, almost all of the bills I filed have been heard in committee. Just prior to and just after the hearing, most of the bills attracted the attention of individuals or lobbyists. Some wanted to say they liked the bill; others to point out what is not liked.

In either case, an argument for changing the language of the bill is usually discussed. Consequently, a substitute bill is presented to the committee. Even then, more changes may be needed to get the bill to a status that the committee members feel comfortable voting favorably.

Sometimes, several bills have a similar theme and intent. When that happens, there are several options. One would be to work on the bill filed in the office. The other is to hold back and let the best of the other bills pass. The most flexible is to work with other members to incorporate ideas together. After all, if the end intent is to impact the same problem, then a bill with several ideas is the best.

The third option to me is the best way to go. I have done just that in the past and I intend to do the same to achieve the desired changes in law this session.

Part of the logic for doing that is because the El Paso delegation is so isolated. Other districts cluster in areas where there are naturally ten, fifteen, maybe as much as twenty members. Bills originating in areas like that automatically have a lot more votes than bills coming out of El Paso.

This session I filed a bill that would add some more oversight to customs brokers who authorize refunds to international travelers. My office worked with brokers and merchants to write a bill that was favorable to all. The brokers and merchants were fearful that more conservative bills would eliminate their program so they eagerly put more regulation on themselves.

A south Texas representative and a senator filed a similar, but less inclusive bill. I worked with the house member to incorporate very important parts of my bill into his. That bill is now a better bill and more likely to pass since south Texas has more members clustered there.

I plan to do the same with one of my bills dealing with bars where violence or illegal activity had occurred. Both mine and the other bill addressed the frequency of those bars turning into a club allowing the crowd to bring their own booze.

I have never been concerned with passing a lot of bills. I have worked with many members to produce positive changes in the law by negotiating and compromising. Changing the laws rarely happens on a grand scale; things are improved a little bit at a time with a lot of collaboration.

I remain your friend and public servant, Chente por la gente.

Attorneys offer free assistance for legal healthcare directives

By Elhiu Dominguez
Special to the Courier

EL PASO COUNTY – El Paso County Attorney’s Office, the University Medical Center of El Paso and the El Paso Medical Society, along with other community organizations, will celebrate National Healthcare Decisions Day (April 16) with two public events highlighting the importance of advance healthcare decision-making.

On April 15 and 16, 2011, volunteers from all participating organizations will be providing information and forms to individuals interested in talking to family, friends and healthcare providers about their medical wishes. During the events licensed attorneys will provide free assistance on how to execute advance directives (Medical Power of Attorney and Living Wills).

The kick-off event is scheduled for Friday April 15, 2011 at 10:00 a.m. at Centro San Vicente Clinic at 8061 Alameda. Following the kick-off, from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., local attorneys will be offering free assistance regarding advance care planning and advance directive forms.

The second event will be held on Saturday April 16, 2011 at Bassett Place Mall, 6101 Gateway Blvd. West, also from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Again, local attorneys will be offering free assistance regarding advance care planning and advance directive forms.

Advance directives are legal documents that allow you to convey your decisions about end-of-life care ahead of time. They provide a way for you to communicate your wishes to family, friends and health care professionals, and to avoid confusion later on.

A Directive to Physicians or Living Will tells how you feel about care intended to sustain life. You can accept or refuse medical care. There are many issues to address, including:

- The use of dialysis and breathing machines;
- If you want to be resuscitated if breathing or heartbeat stops;
- Tube feeding;
- Organ or tissue donation; and
- Blood transfusions.

A Medical Power of Attorney is a document that names your health care proxy. Your proxy is someone you trust to make health decisions if you are unable to do so.

El Paso County Attorney Jo Anne Bernal explained that living wills and medical powers of attorney are two very important tools that allow an individual to participate in future medical care decisions even if they become incapacitated.

“Although it can be a difficult topic, it is very important that, regardless of our age, we all plan for the final phase of life or even for unexpected emergencies. The absence of written directives may prolong invasive and often painful but ultimately fruitless therapies, or deny a patient treatment that could provide comfort,” Bernal said.

“By promoting the use of advance directives in our community, we hope fewer families and healthcare providers will have to struggle with making difficult healthcare decisions in the absence of guidance from the patient,” Bernal concluded.

Individuals interested in getting the Directive to Physicians and Medical Power of Attorney forms can download them by visiting the County Attorney’s webpage at www.epcounty.com/ca.

SAN ELIZARIO – Dressed in their crisp uniforms and marching in perfect formation, the San Elizario High School Naval Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps (NJROTC) cadets displayed the precision drills and discipline qualities they have developed over the course of the school year in front of family, district administrators, and other guests at the annual military inspection on March 31. The event is an impressive ceremonial showcase and also serves as an opportunity for the NJROTC program to demonstrate the positive impact it can have on students.

According to San Elizario High School Naval Science Instructor, Chief Manuel P. Jaquez, the inspection spotlights the competencies and personal development of students.

“It provides cadets the opportunity to show composure, confidence and technical proficiency not only in front of a senior officer but with everyone in decorum,” Jaquez said.

The San Elizario High School NJROTC is required to pass an annual military inspection just like other units throughout the nation. This year the program, under the direction of Lieutenant Commander James W. Snarr and Jaquez, was reviewed by the NJROTC Area 10 Manager Commander Michael Hale. Hale conducted an examination of all 90 plus members of the JNROTC, drill teams, and a

STRANGE BUT TRUE

By Samantha Weaver

• It was evolutionary biologist Richard Dawkins who made the following sage observation: “We are all atheists about most of the gods that societies have ever believed in. Some of us just go one god further.”

• It’s been reported that for one two-year stretch, Elvis Presley ate nothing but meat loaf, mashed potatoes and tomatoes.

• In parts of Asia, tradition holds that if you sneeze once, someone is saying something good about you; if you sneeze twice in a row, something bad is being said; if you sneeze three times, someone is in love with you; and if you sneeze more than three times, you’re about to catch a cold.

• If you’re like the average human, you have about 1,500 dreams every year.

• We all know that the phrase “dog days of summer” refers to the most sultry days of the year, but have you ever wondered where the term came from? It seems that the ancient Romans believed that when Sirius, known as the dog star, shined the brightest – which was during mid-summer – it added its heat to the heat of the sun, making the hot season even more unbearable.

• Libra is the only sign of the zodiac that is not an animal.

• Even if you don’t remember it from its original air dates in the 1950s and ‘60s, you surely have heard of the iconic American situation comedy “Leave It to Beaver.” You might not realize, though, that the original working title was “Wally and the Beaver.” The producers thought that made it sound like a show about a boy and his pet, so they changed it.

Thought for the Day: “A conservative is a man who believes that nothing should be done for the first time.”

earns marks in different areas such as student participation, uniforms and finance records.

The San Elizario High School NJROTC Annual Military Inspection program featured platoon leaders' reports, presentation of colors, exhibition drills, and a procession of the entire corps. Guest speakers included Hale and Colonel Roy Gray, who began the NJROTC program at San Elizario High School in 2001. Medals were also awarded to the best overall students from each grade level for presentation and leadership skills.

The 95 students that make up the San Elizario High School NJROTC are lead by other students: Company Officer Gema Ruiz, Executive Officer Gustavo Reyes, Operations Officer Ariana Ortega, Supply Officer Cristina Morales, Administrative Officer Jacob Solis, Personnel Officer Michel Villa, and Command Senior Chief Martin Caudillo. Color Guard members for the inspection were Michel Villa, Alma De La Cruz, Manuel Hernandez, and Guillermo Carrillo. The four platoons were led by Laura Ortega, Diego Dominguez, Eduardo Morales, and Martha Cereceres. Guidon bearers were Hector Mendoza, Pedro Castillo, Jesus Falcon, and Cesar Salas.

The San Elizario High School NJROTC inspection mirrors the regular schedule of the program throughout the year which includes two days of academics, two days of drills, and one day of physical fitness. It is formatted as a civics program and there is no requirement for students to enlist in the military for participating in NJROTC which is a common misconception. The focus of the program, one of only a handful in El Paso County, is on developing citizenship and personal responsibility.

Jaquez believes that all students who have participated in NJROTC leave with some degree of positive character growth.

"Students who have graduated come back to tell me that they are really appreciative of the program and remember the annual inspection the most," Jaquez stated. "NJROTC is a program that most kids like and enjoy and you can see the positive changes it has on them."

Crime Stoppers

Unknown persons have been destroying or vandalizing Sun Metro bus shelters around the city, costing all of us tax dollars and making this the Crime Stoppers "Crime of the Week." On Thursday, Mar. 10, 2011, Sun Metro workers were placing information in various bus shelters and discovered that the display cases had been smashed and other vandalism committed. In the past five years Sun Metro has spent millions of dollars on improvements, including placing 200 new shelters around town for the benefit of bus riders and to improve our community's appearance. That is all being offset by the ongoing vandalism. Investigators are asking for help from the public in identifying the subjects responsible for this criminal mischief. Because the bus shelters are located in public places, on well-traveled streets, they ask that anyone who has noticed suspicious persons hanging around the shelters — especially late at night — to provide information that will help bring this vandalism to a stop. Perhaps you heard someone brag about what was done. If you have any information at all about the identity of the suspects, please call Crime Stoppers immediately at 566-TIPS (566-8477) or on-line at www.crimestoppersofelpaso.org. You will remain anonymous and, if your tip leads to an arrest, you can qualify for a cash reward.

Children, if your parents won't behave, leave 'em home

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

Ever since I was just an itty bitty reporter I was taught that adults were the source of all information and that their best method of teaching was to lead by example.

Obviously, that parenting memo never reached some of the coaches and parents involved in what has been described as a large-scale fight at a youth baseball game at the El Paso SportsPark last week.

It appears that coaches and parents were arguing with each other before the heated words were replaced by fists and headlocks.

Almost sounds like a Jerry Spring rerun – only more despicable.

Seems the arguments started over one team accusing the other of using a kind of altered bat during the game.

What makes this episode so ugly is that these mind-dead parents and coaches were behaving the way they were right in front of their players – aged 10-12.

Gee, how proud they must be of themselves today.

There were even reports that one of the combatants involved was an off-duty El Paso police officer. Of course he says he was a peacemaker, others say he was one of the instigators.

Who knows?

I've been to a few little league games in my time and I have to tell you that the guys yelling at the refs at a UTEP Miner basketball game have nothing on the filth that is spewed at any little league game.

I don't understand it. When my kids were little (I mean 4, 5 and 6 year-old little) I can remember parents booing the opposing players when they would go up to bat at a tee-ball game.

These poor little kids didn't even know what they were doing out there – all they knew is that their parents made them dress up and run out on the grass.

It's amazing what a parent will yell at an umpire in front of a 10-year-old kid.

The biggest problem that I see at these games is that many of the parents aren't so much worried about how a bad game will affect their kids – all these insecure individuals think about is how a bad game by their kids will reflect on them.

In their minds, if their kid does bad it's more of an indication of their bad parenting skills or lack of athletic prowess.

They quickly forget that their main duty is to let the kids have fun, do their best and learn the importance of sportsmanship.

Of course the majority of the parents and coaches are excellent role models and inspire the kids to grow into upstanding citizens, but oh those few selfish adults who care more about their egos than their own kids and all the other kids on the field.

Getting back to the fight at the SportsPark, the brawl was finally stopped by Sheriff's deputies, umpires and a staff member.

The Sheriff's Department is still investigating the incident because some of those involved split before officers arrived.

Unfortunately, the kids were there to experience everything.

And what do young impressionable kids learn when they see adults lose control and settle their grievances by using violence?

Naturally, they'll learn that it's okay to smack someone around that they disagree with – and why not – they saw the older and wiser adults do it that way.

And every kid knows that adults lead by example.

All of the adults involved in this melee, if they are ever found, should at least be charged with some sort of disorderly conduct and be made to pay a healthy fine.

Then they should be banned from all little league events for at least a year.

They should not be allowed back until they receive some sort of counseling.

If they lose control again they should be incarcerated and banned from little league events for life.

If certain adults keep up this kind of behavior, then obviously, they have no idea how to control themselves in front of young children. And is that ever a good thing?

I can't think of many other things as pleasant as enjoying young kids playing a game on a summer evening.

When it's done responsibly and with compassion and respect – it's a beautiful thing.

The way it was conducted last week at the SportsPark – it doesn't get any uglier than that.

A sporting view By Mark Vasto

The NCAA needs to relax

It wouldn't be the first time I'd have quoted him (or any other coach for that matter) in, shall we say, a relaxed manner.

But the chat I had that day with University of Maryland head coach Gary Williams about the challenge the Terrapins stared into every year, faced with the considerable challenges presented by Duke, the University of North Carolina and any of the other fine Atlantic Coast Conference teams, made an impression.

As if the contention on the court wasn't enough, the real fighting took place in living rooms all across the country when Williams vied against Coach K and Dean Smith (at the time) for top-notch recruits. But as Williams dragged the Terps off of the NCAA's death row – no TV, no tournament in the wake of Len Bias' death – and turned them into perennial contenders before finally punching through to the championship in 2002 – he also was criticized for his team's academic and graduating status.

In short, the record wasn't very flattering. The Terps ranked toward the bottom of the ACC in terms of graduation and grade-point average. But after Joe Smith bolted from the school after his sophomore year and Steve Francis flew the coop following his freshman year, local media started to put the press on Williams. Williams' explanation went a little something like this: Hey, basketball was their education.

For some people, like ESPN.com's Tim Keown, that's not a good enough answer.

"The NCAA should stop prostituting itself for the sake of the one-and-done players and release itself from the NBA's rule against players heading to the NBA or the D-League out of high school," Keown wrote. "The players are the indentured servants – and no, don't tell me a scholarship is adequate payment for the revenues received by the universities and the NCAA... the NBA doesn't have to pay to train its workforce, and the NCAA is fine with that."

Filmmaker Spike Lee takes the analogies a bit further – and in less column space.

"The NC-two-A are the biggest pimps around," Lee said in a recent town hall on racial issues in sports. "They are pimping athletes."

Advocates of paying players for their time point to the NBA and NFL's profit sharing model (they receive 57 percent and 58 percent, respectively). Under such a plan, players in larger programs like Texas would receive upward of $700,000 each season. But they don't – they get free tuition, a huge value most would agree, but a pittance in comparison to what the schools receive, and hence, the street-corner references.

The NCAA doesn't like the analogy.

"We get nasty communication pretty frequently," NCAA Mike Emmert said in a defensive response to the comments. He dismisses the profit-sharing model.

"[Students] are not employees, they're students," Emmert said.

And, for some schools, the revenues don't necessarily generate a surplus. Using Maryland again as an example – a university that actively competes in most sports the NCAA offers – its net surplus on the year came to a little more than $45,000.

The conclusion for now? Taking a cue from my chat with Williams, maybe it's time for all of us – including the NCAA, with its overly restrictive rules on student compensation – to relax a bit.

OUT ON A LIMB By Gary Kopervas

AMBER WAVES By Dave T. Phipps

THE SPATS By Jeff Pickering

R.F.D. By Mike Marland

Your good health By Paul G. Donahue, M.D.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I've been trying to deal with shingles pain for six months. At times it's so bad that I can't sleep. I have tried Tylenol, Aleve and Advil, and some herbals that my wife bought. Nothing works. Can you tell me what will? How did I get it? Will the shingles vaccine take away the pain? — R.M.

Shingles comes from the awakened chickenpox virus that has been hibernating in nerve cells ever since the childhood infection. Even if you can't remember having had chickenpox, odds are you did. More than 90 percent of adults — in fact, close to 99 percent — have evidence of a prior chickenpox infection in their blood.

Once the shingles rash goes, pain continues to remain in a significant number of people. That's not shingles. It's called postherpetic neuralgia. When the chickenpox virus crept down nerves to your skin, it injured the nerves. That's what causes lingering pain long after the shingles rash has disappeared.

Plenty of medicines can quiet that pain. You have to experiment to find which works for you. Lyrica is a somewhat newer addition to these medicines. You need a prescription for it. Capsaicin cream, gel or lotion is found on the shelves of all drugstores. You apply it directly to the painful skin. Qutenza is a new preparation of capsaicin. It's applied by your doctor or a health professional in a one-hour treatment, and is touted to provide three months of pain relief.

The lidocaine patch is another skin-applied treatment that quiets pain. Amitriptyline and Cymbalta, both antidepressants, are oral medicines that can dull postherpetic pain. Opioids like tramadol and oxycodone can be turned to when others fail. And this is just an abbreviated inventory of treatments.

The shingles vaccine doesn't do a thing for postherpetic neuralgia; it cuts the chances of developing shingles in half. And if a vaccinated person does develop shingles, it lessens the chances of postherpetic neuralgia. It's recommended for everyone 60 and older.

The shingles pamphlet explores this common illness in detail. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue — No. 1201W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Will you discuss the eating of canned tuna? I enjoy a tuna-salad sandwich once in a while. But I read that the mercury in tuna is harmful, especially to expectant mothers and small children, and to adults in general. I also read that light tuna is less toxic than white albacore tuna. Will you clarify this? — D.R.

Shark, swordfish, king mackerel and tilefish are the fish with the highest mercury concentrations.

Seafood that is low in mercury and quite safe includes shrimp, canned light tuna, salmon and catfish.

Albacore (white) tuna has more mercury than canned light tuna, but it's OK to eat 6 ounces of it once a week. Eating a tuna-salad sandwich, whichever the source of tuna, once in a while (once a week) isn't going to cause any health problems.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. (c) 2011 North America Synd., Inc. All Rights Reserved.

Unscramble these twelve letter strings to form each into an ordinary word (ex. HAGNEC becomes CHANGE). Prepare to use only ONE word from any marked (♥) letter string as each unscrambles into more than one word (ex. ♥RATHE becomes HATER or EARTH or HEART). Fit each string's word either across or down to knot all twelve strings together.
