While the victim was inside a Westside eating establishment an unknown offender enters her pickup, takes her purse and later uses her debit card to make unauthorized purchases, making this the Crime Stoppers "Crime of the Week." At 9:00 a.m. on Saturday, April 28, 2012, the victim parked in the lot at a strip center at 7500 N. Mesa and went into a business. While there, someone entered her 2006 Maroon Ford F-150 pickup and took her purse that contained important documents and credit and debit cards. The victim later discovered that her debit card had been used at a nearby gasoline station and that other cards had been used at several stores in the Outlet Mall. As seen on surveillance video at a mall store, the suspect appears to be a white or Hispanic man, about 30 years of age, medium height and build, wearing a Panama type hat, black sunglasses, a grey hoodie, dark pants, and a black backpack. It is unknown what vehicle he may have had. If you have any information at all about the identity of the suspect in this case, please contact Crime Stoppers of El Paso at 566-TIPS (566-8477), on-line at www.crimestoppersofelpaso.org or you can send a text message by entering the key word CRIME1 (no space) plus your tip information, and text it to CRIMES (274637). Fireworks ban runs to 7 a.m. on July 5

By Don Woodyard
Special to the Courier

EL PASO COUNTY — "I didn't do it lightly," says County Judge Veronica Escobar.

The county judge is referring to action taken by Commissioners Court earlier this month in banning all Fourth of July fireworks on East Montana Avenue and the rest of the county because of the risk of fire in drought conditions.

"(However) it could be tragic if we did nothing," she continues, looking ahead. "I just couldn't sit back and do nothing. The health, safety and welfare of the residents are paramount."

Escobar took action on June 11th as she issued a "Declaration of Local Disaster." On June 13th, Commissioners Court voted 3-2, affirming the action.

The county judge says there are four steps to be taken in the issuance of the disaster declaration. The steps are:

- Have to exceed the drought index — "We have exceeded the index, and it is getting worse," she points out;

- To have a county judge willing to issue the ban;
- To have a willing Commissioners Court; and
- Contact Gov. Rick Perry's office for official approval of the fireworks ban.

The action by the court came despite pleas and petitions by business owners along East Montana who state that much of their livelihood is derived from those who come out their to set off fireworks and celebrate the holiday.

"We are still in a recession, and retail businesses in the East Montana area are just as affected as other El Paso businesses," says Jay Carruth, an Horizon City resident and owner of a tax preparation company on East Montana. In his news release he points out that "during a 10-day period ending on July 4th, retail business earns as much income during the rest of the year."

In a separate interview, he adds that revenues during this time frame are "tremendous."

Carruth says business owners are not the only ones affected by the ban. He points out that many non-profit organizations benefit in the selling of fireworks. He notes the precautions they take to take action in the event of a fire.

Echoing Carruth is Yvonne Hinijosa who is store manager Silver Streak Restaurant and Quick Silver Exxon on East Montana. "We've been really hurting for the last two years," she says. "It (July 4th) has been our busiest day of the year. Sales have really dropped."

Daniel Haggerty, commissioner for Precinct 4, supports the actions of the residents who want to celebrate

Veronica Escobar

The Fourth. He was one of the two who voted against imposing the ban. The other, he says, was Sergio Lewis, commissioner for Precinct 2.

"The risk just isn't there," Haggerty says. "It takes the fun out of the holiday. Let's have some fun."

A veteran, Haggerty says he "fought hard for this privilege while serving in Vietnam."

The City of Socorro, however, is allowing the sale and use of fireworks inside its city limits. Aerial fireworks are not allowed. Mayor Trini Lopez is concerned that people will flock to Socorro to buy and pop fireworks. "We shouldn't be doing this because of the drought and the danger to homeowners," he said. The Socorro council approved fireworks sales and use by a margin of 4-1.

Fireworks are banned in El Paso, the Town of Anthony, the Village of Vinton, the Town of Horizon City and the Town of Clint. Professional public displays that are authorized by permit or license are not covered by the ban.

Public shows on the 4th

- Cohen Stadium
9700 Gateway North Boulevard
- Socorro Entertainment Center
11200 Santo Sanchez Road
- Western Playland Amusement Park

Enforcement

The El Paso County Sheriff's Office will enforce the ban of all fireworks in all the unincorporated areas of El Paso County. The ban includes sales, use and possession of fireworks until 7:00 a.m. on July 5, 2012. The sale, possession, or discharge of fireworks in the unincorporated areas of El Paso County is a Class "C" misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $500. This violation would include those who purchase fireworks legally in some other jurisdiction but travel into and/or store fireworks in the unincorporated areas of the county. The El Paso County Sheriff's Office Patrol Stations will have drop off sites for anyone wishing to dispose of fireworks or pyrotechnics at the following locations:

- Montana Station, 12501 Montana Ave., (856-4875);
- Clint Station, 190 N. San Elizario, (851-3287); and
- Vinton Station, 436 E. Vinton Rd., (886-2724).

Veterans Post By Freddy Groves

Crackdown coming on pension claims

Veterans of wartime service are eligible for a pension if they meet certain criteria: age 65 or older, can't work, service during a certain period, have limited income. These criteria must be met, especially the limits on income.

I hate to think it, but a number of veterans are cheating the system, and financial planners are helping them.

The Government Accountability Office has unearthed no less than 200 companies that sell estate-planning services designed to help veterans who have too many assets to qualify for the pension benefit. Of those, the GAO investigated 20 companies that help establish trusts, set up annuities and transfer assets (that's currently allowed under law).

Of course these companies charge a fee, from hundreds to many thousands of dollars, for their advice – advice that might not be in the veteran's best interest.

A bill is making its way through Congress that would require stronger oversight of the benefits money. For example, depending how the final version of the bill reads, there could be a "look back" of three years. That means the veteran's finances and assets will be scrutinized to see if he or she transferred any assets during that time to make the income look smaller.

If you're tempted to transfer assets to make it look like you qualify for the pension (even though it's currently legal), be careful. If you apply for Medicaid, it does a 60-month look-back. If you've transferred assets, your Medicaid long-term-care coverage could be delayed for a long time. If you put assets into an annuity, thinking that you'll have a monthly income from it, you might be locked out of it for years.

To read details of some of the shady financial dealings these companies are promoting, go online to www.gao.gov and put GAO-12-784T in the search box.

The U.S. Department of Education is trying to give college graduates assistance in dealing with student debt. However, less than two percent of all eligible college graduates with student loan debt opt for the income-based repayment plan. The problem is that many students don't know about the assistance; it is not promoted in the financial aid offices as much as it could be, according to the U.S. Public Interest Research Group in Washington, D.C. Above, UTEP Financial Aid office personnel help students with paperwork.

Federal government repayment plan offers college students loan relief

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

As college costs continue to rise, options for paying for a college education seem to be moving out of reach for many Americans. A fortunate few have the financial capability to go to college without having to worry about expenses – whether it is because of scholarships they've earned or family wealth they've acquired.

However, most individuals interested in going to post-secondary institution must depend on student loans to finance their educational endeavors. Consequently, individuals are graduating from colleges with enormous debt burdens.

So, while U.S. Congress currently negotiates a compromise for restraining the annual interest rate for student loans from doubling from 3.4 to 6.8 % (set to go into effect in July), another little-known federal government repayment plan is also trying to offer borrowers some relief.

A recent study by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York shows that the average student loan debt accumulated by a college graduate is $23,300. And, government officials contend that the steady growth of college costs and student debt ties directly into concerns about the economy and jobs.

Therefore, the federal government introduced a way for college student loan borrowers to reduce their monthly loan payments and potentially have their loan debt dismissed. The program has actually been in effect since 2009.

The new program named the Income-Based Repayment (IBR) plan, caps payments at a percentage of a graduate's monthly salary and dismisses all federal loan debt after a designated time period. All students with Stafford, PLUS or consolidation loans can use the IBR plan.

Although the plan's benefits seem obvious, less than two percent of all eligible college graduates have taken advantage of the income-based repayment plan – about 450,000 out of 36 million borrowers, according to a U.S. Department of Education (DOE) report.

Regardless of how much federal debt they have, grads enrolled in the IBR plan will never have to

How to catch a 'Phish'

By Jason Alderman
Special to the Courier

Their names may sound funny but their financial consequences are not: "Phishing," "smishing," "vishing" and "pharming" are just a few of the ways criminals gain access to personal information via your computer or smartphone. If you're not careful, identity thieves can use harvested information to open fraudulent bank or credit card accounts, take out loans, rent apartments or even charge medical procedures to your insurance plan.

Unfortunately, every time the authorities plug one hole, crafty criminals figure out new ways to trick unsuspecting victims. Here are some identity theft scams to watch out for:

- Phishing: This is where you receive an email, purportedly from a trusted source like a government agency, bank or retailer that asks you to supply or confirm account information, log-in IDs or passwords. These imposters are "fishing" for your personal information. Legitimate organizations never ask you to verify sensitive information through a non-secure means like email.

- Smishing (for "Short Message Service"): Like phishing, only it uses text messages sent to your cellphone. Even if you don't share any information, just by responding you're verifying that your phone number is valid, which means it probably will be sold to others who will try to trick you into their own scams.

- Vishing (voice phishing): Where live or automated callers direct you to call your bank or credit card issuer under the pretext of clearing up a problem (like theft or overdrawn accounts). You'll be asked to share personal or account information. Keep a list of toll-free service numbers for all companies you use so you can call them directly without fearing you've been given bogus information. I also program these numbers – but not account numbers – into my cell phone in case I'm traveling.

- Pharming. Where hackers redirect you from a legitimate website to an impostor site where your personal information is harvested ("farmed"). Social networking sites like Facebook and Twitter increasingly are being targeted, so always be wary of opening any links – even from trusted friends – because their account may have been hacked.

A few tips for spotting risky emails and texts:

- Although the "From" line may appear to be from a valid company email address, that's easy for fraudsters to mimic (called "spoofing").
- Beware of subject lines and body copy that use ominous or threatening language (e.g., "Your credit card has been suspended").
- Lack of a personalized salutation or closing details (e.g., "Dear Valued Customer").
- Watch for typos, poor grammar, punctuation, capitalization consistency and other warning signs it's not legitimate.
- Scroll your mouse over any embedded links before clicking to check for suspicious domain endings like ".be."
- Verify that an alert or request for information is legitimate by looking up the company's phone number and calling it yourself.
- Make sure your anti-virus and anti-spyware software is current.

For more tips protecting personal and account information and preventing online fraud, visit:

- The National Cyber Security Alliance's www.staysafeonline.org.
- The FBI's Be Crime Smart page, which highlights the latest scams and tells you how to report crime and fraud (www.fbi.gov/scams-safety).
- Visa Inc. offers VisaSecuritySense.com, which features tips on preventing fraud online, when traveling, at retail establishments and ATMs, deceptive marketing practices, and more.

And finally, don't forget good-old-fashioned pickpocketing, mail theft and dumpster diving as ways people may try to steal your personal information.

‘Catching Babies’ documentary film highlights role of midwives

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

In an attempt to explore the role of midwives in the 21st century, Sandra Iturbe will facilitate the screening of a groundbreaking documentary, entitled “Catching Babies”, and lead a discussion about the completion of this unique film project and its implications.

The special program will be held at 2 p.m., Saturday, June 30, in the El Paso Museum of History’s Seminar Room, 510 Santa Fe Street. The presentation is free and open to the public.

The film screening and discussion is in conjunction with the museum’s current exhibit, Healing Hands and Healing Ways: Traditional Medicine in the Borderlands, and is co-sponsorship with Museo Urbano, a project of the Department of History at the University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP).

Catching Babies was produced and directed by Barni Axmed Qaasim and co-produced by Jennifer Lucero. The film is a beautiful story centering on the training that three women received at Maternidad la Luz, a local school that teaches women how to become midwives and is considered to be among the most demanding in the country.

Qaasim is a filmmaker and writer who resides in San Francisco, California. Her work focuses on sharing the stories and experiences of people who are left out of dominant Western media. Her work spans documentary to music videos.

Lucero is a graduate of the UTEP where she received her degree in Electronic Media, focusing on documentary film work and a minor in Women’s Studies. Lucero believes that communication is the fire starter of every social change and seeks to give people a voice through film making. Currently, Lucero resides in Cleveland, Ohio where she works at a grass roots non-profit resource center using media to raise awareness about HIV/STDS and reproductive issues.

Iturbe is one of the three women featured in the documentary that follows their journey to becoming midwives. Iturbe stated that her professional coursework paralleled her spiritual studies as she learned the “Mexica”, or indigenous Mexican, traditions that surround birth and pregnancy.

Iturbe, who considers herself a

For 2012, "discretionary income" equals any earnings over $16,755 for a single-person household. Grads earning less than $16,755 will have payments capped at zero dollars, and those who make consecutive payments for 25 years will have their remaining debt dismissed.

Grads who work in public service fields such as nursing, social work or public defense will have their debt dismissed after 10 years of consecutive payments, according to the DOE guidelines.

To increase awareness about the IBR plan, the DOE and the White House are working on a plan to get the word out about the repayment program and to make it easier for them to enroll in it.

Recently, the White House released details for streamlining the online application process for IBR by October. The new process will allow borrowers to submit their tax information directly into the IBR application, which will shorten the process.

Plans are to also require the DOE to provide a sample exit counseling session to colleges and universities that explains IBR and students' repayment options by June 2013.

A study by a Washington, D.C.-based advocacy group showed that among high-debt borrowers, 65 percent didn't understand certain aspects of the student loan process and 20 percent misunderstood their repayment terms.

Jason DeLisle, director of the Federal Education Budget Project at the New America Foundation, a nonprofit public policy institute in Washington, D.C., added that many students don't opt for income-based repayment because they don't need it, according to an article on the Bankrate.com website.

"The vast majority of borrowers with $12,000 in loans will have lower monthly payments under a standard 10-year repayment plan. Only those borrowers with incomes below $28,000 will be better off in IBR," DeLisle stated in the article.

The upside of income-based repayment is that it can keep a federal loan from defaulting, which means avoiding the bad credit, wage garnishment, collection costs and legal actions that come with default. The downside is that, in many cases, it can increase the loan amount. IBR enrollees can end up paying thousands more in interest since income-based repayment lasts two and a half times longer than the standard 10-year repayment plan.

Nonetheless, "For borrowers who fall financially behind and could face defaulting on their loan, income-based repayment is an excellent support program. Once the borrower regains fiscal footing, they will price out of the program," according to one financial aid expert.

Interested individuals are invited to participate and share the personal moments and stresses of these women as they learned about their inner strengths and now help empower other women. The discussion will focus on the history of midwives and the cultural implications and contemporary issues regarding the profession.

El Paso has chance to step up to the plate of opportunity

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

Obviously, all the talk this week has surrounded the possible sale of a Triple-A baseball team to El Paso.

And let's be honest, by the time it gets this far in the process, the sale is practically a done deal.

I think this is a fantastic idea. Don't get me wrong, I like plenty of hospitals and places to eat, but the citizens of El Paso need more things to do – more things to attend.

The idea is to build a state-of-the-art stadium on the piece of land that City Hall and the Insights Museum share. Juarez would be behind the batter and the outfield view would include downtown El Paso and the mountain.

It seems that there will be plenty of parking and the access to the new stadium seems reasonable.

One of the best things about bringing the Triple-A franchise to El Paso this time around is that the choice will not be put into the hands of the voters.

Unfortunately, El Pasoans are notorious for voting down anything involving a quality of life improvement to the area. They're masters at complaining about the lack of things to do – but they cringe at the thought of taking a chance.

Over the years, I think it's fair to say that El Paso has turned into a city that is afraid of success.

While cities like San Antonio, Phoenix, Tucson and Austin invite industry, entertainment and sports franchises with open arms, El Paso has always managed to politely excuse itself from the process.

In other words, no harm no foul, out of sight out of mind, hiding your head in the sand, nothing ventured nothing gained, neither a borrower nor a lender be.

However you want to put it, El Paso has always been seen as the state's little stepchild that spends most of its time in the corner waiting for the unwanted scraps tossed at it.

And that, is our own fault. Just like standing as one against the chancellor's ruling that the fight be stopped, getting a Triple-A baseball team could be a sign that El Paso may be getting a sense of itself.

El Paso appears to be on the verge of changing its image. We're too big not to.

I'm tired of people saying that downtown is a bad idea because of the proximity to Juarez. That the danger level is too high and there was that one stray bullet that hit a woman near City Hall.

I'm also tired of people who say things without doing their homework or even getting within shouting distance of the facts.

According to national data, out of every 100,000 people living in Baltimore, 34.8 are murdered per year. Detroit 34.5, Kansas City 21.1, New Orleans 49.1, Oakland 22.1 and St. Louis 40.5.

All these cities are similar to El Paso in population and all support Major League franchises. Oh by the way, El Paso averages just 0.8 murders per 100,000 citizens.

It's funny, nobody has a problem with these others "dangerous" cities hosting professional events and franchises – so why El Paso?

If we were building this stuff in Juarez, now you'd have an argument.

It's time to start moving forward. With the multi-purpose downtown arena on the ballot this November, this is just the beginning of El Paso's metamorphosis.

Also, with the building of a soccer stadium, downtown would house a sports complex area with shared parking facilities and various restaurants and shops that always spring up where large groups of people congregate.

Non-sports fans out there, a new downtown arena will also benefit you.

Remember, this would be a multi-purpose building that would house concerts, circuses, off-Broadway shows, conventions and any number of other events.

But let's not settle for a 10,000-seat center, we've already got the 12,000-seat Don Haskins Center. This arena will have to hold at least 18,000 for those big events that keep passing us by.

I remember back when El Paso said "no thank you" to a chance to build a SeaWorld and a Six Flags amusement park. I mark that as the time when this city fell behind all its close neighbors.

I mark this week's city council vote on the new baseball stadium as the time when El Paso started to turn around.

A sporting view By Mark Vasto

The outer limits

If the NHL and the PGA could figure out a way to allow fans control their viewing experience by basically merging EA Sports' ultra-popular video game experience, it would become, almost overnight, a massive success.

But it has to be real control – we can tell when we're being patronized.

Hockey doesn't translate well on TV. It's a white background mostly and the puck is a bit too small to see with comfortable regularity. So Fox programmers hit on the idea to make the puck digitally glow for the home viewers so they'd be able to follow the puck better. Oh... and whenever somebody took a slapshot, the puck would shoot out a red laser.

If there was one very good takeaway from the experience, it was the taking away of the glow-puck technology. The best takeaway, however, may have been how viewers figured out that watching the puck wasn't as important as watching the whirling, scheming and plotting that was unfurling just off to the side of the screen.

I would like to see hockey broadcasts give viewers a bigger hand in the game's presentation. Instead of cluttering the picture with pop-ups and a scrolling ticker at the bottom of the screen, let the viewers pick and choose the extra elements they want on screen. Let them choose between a horizontal or vertical view and, if vertical, which goal they wanted to view from. Give fans a chance to click on a player for his statistics, biography or recent history. These are all options offered to anybody who's ever played a video game in the past 20 years.

Golf, on the other hand, could probably use that glow-puck technology. It amazes me, that after all of these years, the best way we know how to broadcast the game of

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: From the minute I get out of bed, I have attacks of dizziness. I don't know what brings them on. I'm afraid these spells are going to make me fall and break something. Do you have any thoughts that could help? I'm 82. - R.M.

turn your head to the left. Roll over onto your left side, with your nose pointed down to the floor, for 30 seconds. Then go back to the starting sitting position with head bent. If dizziness persists, repeat. If this is too complicated, let your doctor lead you through it.

The causes of dizziness (vertigo) are many. I'll mention a couple, but you need a doctor's exam to determine what the exact problem is.

The booklet on dizziness discusses in greater depth its various causes and treatments. To obtain a copy, write: Dr. Donohue - No. 801W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada, with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

Meniere's (main-YAIRS) disease is a triad of dizziness, hearing loss and ear noises (tinnitus). It comes in brief attacks, with recovery in a short time. As time passes, attacks last longer, with briefer periods of relief. A buildup of fluid in the inner ear is responsible. Water pills and a strict low-sodium diet help. Surgical drainage of the fluid is another treatment.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I try to keep up with the latest nutritional recommendations. I have had no formal training, so I am often confused by the terms used. For example, what are simple carbohydrates and complex carbohydrates? What's the difference? - L.A.

A viral infection of the inner ear is a common dizziness cause. Time eventually takes care of the virus. During the period of infection, a medicine like meclizine improves symptoms.

Simple carbohydrates are sugars like table sugar (sucrose). The sugar in intravenous feedings in hospitals is glucose, and fruit sugar is fructose. Both are simple carbohydrates.

A third common problem is benign positional vertigo - dizziness attacks with head movement. Getting out of bed, rolling over in bed, looking up at a high shelf and just about any change in head position trigger an attack, which is short-lived. Tiny calcium crystals in the inner ear have migrated to places where they engender a discharge of confusing signals to the brain. Repositioning the crystals puts an end to the attacks.

Complex carbohydrates are very long chains of the basic carbohydrate unit. Starches are complex carbohydrates. Potatoes, pastas and rice are examples of complex carbohydrates. Complex carbohydrates don't raise blood sugar as quickly as simple ones do.

Sit in the middle of a bed, far enough to the opposite side of the bed that your head will project over that side when you lie down. If a head turn to the right provokes an attack, quickly turn your head to the right, and keep it turned until dizziness goes. Then lie down quickly with your head off the side of the bed and still turned to is the sunniest city in the USA...wonder how the metal clad Spanish explorers fared in the heat?

GO FIGURE! by Linda Thistle

	+		×		32
×		×		+
	-		×		15
+		+		×
	÷		×		20
17		30		35

Social Security Q&A By Ray Vigil

Q: How long do I need to work to become eligible for retirement benefits?

A: Everyone born in 1929 or later needs 40 Social Security credits to be eligible for retirement benefits. You can earn up to four credits per year, so you will need at least 10 years to become eligible for retirement benefits. During your working years, earnings covered by Social Security are posted to your Social Security record. You earn credits based on those earnings. If you become disabled or die before age 62, the number of credits needed depends on your age at the time you die or become disabled. Learn more at www.socialsecurity.gov.

Q: I just got back from an overseas military deployment and I want to plan ahead for my retirement. How will my military retirement affect my Social Security benefits?

A: Your military retirement won't affect your Social Security benefits at all. You can get both. Generally, there is no offset of Social Security benefits because of your military retirement. You will get full Social Security benefits based on your earnings. However your Social Security benefit might be reduced if you also receive a government pension based on a job in which you did not pay Social Security taxes. You can find more information in the publication Military Service and Social Security at www.socialsecurity.gov/pubs/10017.html. Or call us at 1-800-772-1213 (TTY 1-800-325-0778).

Q: Can I receive Social Security benefits and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits at the same time?

A: You may be able to receive SSI in addition to monthly Social Security benefits if your Social Security benefit is low enough for you to qualify for SSI. Whether you can get SSI depends on your income and resources (the things you own). If you have low income and few resources, you may be able to supplement your Social Security benefit with an SSI payment. You can find out more about SSI by going to www.socialsecurity.gov and selecting the "SSI" banner at the top of the page.

For more information on any of the questions listed above, visit our website at www.socialsecurity.gov or call us at 1-800-772-1213. If you have any questions that you would like to have answered, please mail them to the Social Security Office, 1111 Gateway West, Attn: Ray Vigil, El Paso, Texas 79935.

golf is to show a golfer drive, then have the cameraman point his lens up and basically fling the camera to the side. It is amazing that they can always track the ball. I bet you there's a special club of cameramen who specialize in just shooting the drive. But still, for a good 20 percent to 25 percent of the tournament, we're watching a little white ball slightly wobble around the screen. It's ridiculous.

If you've ever played a sports video game, you're familiar with Golden Tee or Tigers Woods Golf. We like those games. Give us the video game view. Let's put a tracer on the drive, but also give me choices of camera view at the green. Give us access to all of your funky little bas-relief maps you have for the course greens.

And why stop there? Merge the broadcast of the game to online games that could, for instance, offer you the chance to replay the game or specific situations against some player in Portugal. It doesn't matter... the possibilities are endless if you're in control.

Unscramble these twelve letter strings to form each into an ordinary word (ex. HAGNEC becomes CHANGE). Prepare to use only ONE word from any marked (♥) letter string as each unscrambles into more than one word (ex. ♥RATHE becomes HATER or EARTH or HEART). Fit each string's word either across or down to knot all twelve strings together.
