Venomous critters

Sal Quintanilla, of the West Texas Regional Poison Center, will present a special program entitled Venomous Critters of the Chihuahuan Desert, at 6 p.m., Thursday, Jan. 10, at the El Paso Museum of History (510 North Santa Fe Street). The bilingual (English and Spanish) program is a must see for all who live in El Paso. If you think poisonous snakes and spiders only live in the wild outdoors, think again. How many of you have had your house infested with scorpions? Did you know that more people working in offices suffer from Brown recluse spider bites than do electricians? Learn about venomous insects, spiders and reptiles and some poisonous plants. Find out which spiders are good and which ones are not. You may be surprised to find that you can use non-poisonous insects and reptiles as "natural" pest control. Did you know that Tarantulas make wonderful pets? Quintanilla will show some live invertebrates and maybe a live snake, all in secure cages. A photo display board will show even more venomous creatures to watch out for in our Chihuahuan Desert environment and in our homes and yards. This program is suitable for children as young as six years through adults. For more information, contact Sue Taylor at (915) 351-3588 or send email to taylorssl@elpasotexas.gov.

MLK Food Drive

The 13th Annual Martin Luther King Jr. Canned Food Drive will be held from Friday, Jan. 4 through Monday, Jan. 21, 2013. The public is asked to donate canned and non-perishable food donations at several locations throughout the City and County including City Hall, County Courthouse, all Wal-Mart Stores, Big 8 grocers, public libraries and other locations. The food collected will be sorted and distributed to organizations that serve the less fortunate on Monday, Jan. 21 (MLK Day). Since its inception, the MLK Canned Food Drive has collected an estimated 250 tons of food. The MLK Canned Food Drive is collaboration between the City and County of El Paso, as well as other community partners, in honor of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. In 1994, congress ratified the King Holiday and Service Act bringing

Anthony landmark to be razed

MAKING WAY FOR THE NEW – One of the consequences of economic development is losing old memories that have been a part of a community's history and culture for many years. This old building, that for many years housed Joe's Body Shop, is being torn down to make way for new commercial development. The building was owned many years ago by Mr. John Hall, father of Jerry Hall, a member of the Anthony Town Council for over thirty years until he resigned for health reasons and passed away due to his illness. His family has sold the property and according to his wife, Sylvia Hall, it served the community of Anthony for many years as a theater, dance hall, and a skating rink. In the 70s it served as a place for wrestling matches that were very popular at the time. The building had been looked at by the Town of Anthony to serve as a museum to help preserve the past. However the condition of building, lack of funding and cost to restore it killed the project.

Brigham appointed interim superintendent of Canutillo ISD

By Gustavo Reveles Acosta

Annette Brigham

CANUTILLO – Annette Brigham – a longtime teacher, principal and administrator who has impacted several generations of Canutillo students – was named the Canutillo Independent School District's new interim superintendent.

The CISD Board of Trustees today voted to appoint Brigham, who currently serves as the District's associate superintendent and chief of staff. She will take on her new role immediately.

"Mrs. Brigham is a well-respected member of our staff who needs no training and is more than capable to lead this district as we start the process of looking for a permanent superintendent," said Board President Armando Rodriguez. "The Board is confident that Mrs. Brigham has the best interest of Canutillo at heart because she is a member of our community both on and off work."

Brigham has been with Canutillo ISD since 1987. She began her career as a technology teacher at Canutillo High School before serving as principal of Childress Elementary first, and then the first principal of the new Alderete Middle School.

After stints as technology and school resources executive director, Brigham was appointed associate superintendent and chief of staff this summer.

A native of Boston, Mass., Brigham received a bachelors degree in computer science from the University of Texas at El Paso, with a masters degree in occupational training and development from Texas A&M University in Corpus Christi.

"Our main task is to educate children and I'm happy to be part of the team of educators that will help move Canutillo forward," she said. "There are some challenges ahead of us, but as interim superintendent my goal is to position our next permanent superintendent for success in Canutillo."

TEA seeks public input on new accountability system

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

Texas residents have until January 18th to submit their comment regarding the current proposals for the new state accountability system for Texas public schools.

Texas Education Agency announced recently that educators and members of the public are invited to review and submit comments electronically at <http://ritter.tea.state.tx.us/perfreport/account/2013/proposals.html>.

"Consideration of educator feedback is critical to the development of a fair and comprehensive accountability system," stated TEA officials.

Information about the new rating system, which will be based in part on the State of Texas Assessments of Academic Readiness (STAAR™), can be found on the 2013 accountability development page at <http://ritter.tea.state.tx.us/perfreport/account/2013/index.html>.

The meeting materials from each accountability advisory committee meeting have been posted online on the 2013 accountability development site to provide educators and the public with the most current information about the development of the new accountability system, stated TEA officials.

Statewide accountability advisory committees have worked with the TEA staff since March 2012 to develop proposals for new accountability ratings and distinction designations as required by House Bill 3 (81st Texas Legislature, 2009).

The commissioner of education will make final decisions on the new accountability system by the end of March 2013.

Veterans Post By Freddy Groves

WWII veterans have stories to tell

We're losing World War II veterans at a rate of 900 per day – one every minute and a half. The older they get, the higher that number will go.

Often, when an elderly veteran dies, his stories go with him. This was the stoic generation, and men who came back from the war didn't talk about it. Years have gone by, and families still don't know the experiences their veteran had. But time has a way of breaking down that barrier of silence, and many of those veterans are ready to talk.

That's where you come in. The Veterans History Project, part of the Library of Congress, provides a means for others to record the stories of veterans before the information is lost forever. For WWII veterans, the eligible years of service are 1939 to 1946.

If you want to help preserve the history of a World War II veteran, don't delay. Start planning now to do an interview. The Project has a Field Kit with instructions. Stories can be captured via audio or video recordings, or in writing. Best bet:

Use a video camera. Pictures add so much to the story. The Project website has instruction on what steps to take, if you're unsure of how to get started and how to proceed.

After the interview with your veteran, the whole package is shipped off to the Project, where it will be archived forever. Future generations will be able to read and hear their stories.

If you don't personally know a World War II veteran, your local veterans service organization will. Once you get started, don't be surprised if other veterans approach you to do their stories as well.

Go here for the Project Field Kit: www.loc.gov/vets.

Make a copy of the interview for the family before you send the package.

Finances By Jason Alderman

Helping the 'unbanked' get affordable financial services

According to a recent survey by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the U.S. Census Bureau, 17 million American adults now live in "unbanked" households, while another 51 million are considered "underbanked." In other words, over 28 percent of households either have no traditional checking or savings accounts (unbanked); or their basic financial needs aren't being met by their bank or credit union so they also rely on alternative lenders like check-cashing services or payday loans (underbanked).

There have always been millions of Americans who are either unable to – or choose not to – conduct their financial transactions through a bank. Common reasons cited include:

- Don't have enough money to need an account.
- Don't write enough checks to justify monthly fees and minimum balance requirements – just buy money orders when needed.
- Lack of proper identification.
- Denied accounts due to bad banking track record.

- Language barriers.
- Bad previous banking experience or lack of trust in banking institutions.

Big retailers and other alternative financial services providers have rushed to fill the void for customers who can't – or won't – use banks or credit card issuers. For example, Bankrate.com lists dozens of prepaid cards that offer many of the same functionalities as regular credit or debit cards, including direct deposit, online purchases and bill pay, ATM access, etc. Other businesses provide such varied services as check-cashing, money orders, wire transfers, and payday, pawnshop or car-title loans.

However, charges for these services can quickly add up. After you've paid a fee to cash your paycheck and bought money orders to pay your monthly bills, you probably will have spent far more than the $5 to $15 a month a regular checking account typically costs.

Although monthly checking and savings account fees at large banks have risen, you still may be able to find free or low-cost accounts at banks and credit unions. To find competitive bank account rates, visit www.bankrate.com/checking.aspx. To find a credit union for which you might be eligible, use the Credit Union Locator at www.ncua.gov.

High fees aside, there's also a safety risk factor to being unbanked. Carrying or storing cash at home tempts robbers; also, money can easily be destroyed in a fire or other natural disaster. Plus, money deposited in FDIC-insured banks is insured up to $250,000 per account (similar insurance is available to credit union accounts through NCUA). It's also more difficult for unbanked consumers to improve their credit scores due to lack of access to credit-building products like credit cards and loans.

To help bring unbanked and underbanked people into the system, an increasing number of public/private programs like Bank On (www.joinbankon.org) are being formed. These voluntary partnerships between local or state governments, financial institutions and community-based organizations provide low-income un- and underbanked people with free or low-cost starter or "second chance" bank accounts and access to financial education.

In addition, many financial education resources are available, including:

- MyMoney.gov, the government's website dedicated to teaching Americans the basics about financial education (www.mymoney.gov).
- FDIC's MoneySmart program of financial education workshops (www.fdic.gov/moneysmart).
- Practical Money Skills for Life (www.practicalmoneyskills.com), a free personal financial management program run by Visa Inc.

There's no law that says everyone must have a traditional banking relationship. But if you choose to go unbanked, carefully investigate the financial consequences – you may not be saving money after all.

Jason Alderman directs Visa's financial education programs.

Drink. Drive. Go to Jail.

What's up doc? By Albert Balesh, M.D.

Don't eat that 'sweet yellow snow'

A history of future shock in diabetes

Leave it to the Ancient Egyptians, who not only introduced aspirin to the known world, but also recognized diabetes back in 1500 B.C. Then the Greeks came along and for whatever reason, tasted the urine of the sick and found it to be sweet. Not a great idea for a cool summer drink! As the North American colonies earned their independence in 1776, Matthew Dobson of Liverpool had his sights set on a prize larger than the Americas and a bit smaller than the Beatles who came 200 years later, as he found increased sugar in the urine of diabetic patients. Insulin was not discovered until 1921, and, frankly, its discovery and what came in the 3500 years before and the almost 100 years after have yielded little in the way of a cure for diabetes.

So, while it is known where diabetes originated, where it is going is an exciting unknown. Physicians, physician assistants, nurses, nutritionists, social workers, and podiatrists have banded together to develop models of care delivery for diabetes from both philanthropic and economic self-interest points of view. That can be taken to the bank! While, on the one hand, it has been noted that physical activity, weight loss, and improved blood sugar control can reduce both the risk of diabetes in the predisposed and the appearance of its complications in the afflicted, other studies have shown that aggressive control of high blood sugar reduces nonfatal heart attacks but surprisingly increases overall mortality from heart attacks. Is there an element of doublespeak here, or are the experts no closer to resolution of the quandary of diabetes management and prevention than the physicians to the Pharaoh? Furthermore, whatever has been gained in basic and clinical science research on the subject has not transferred over to the public health arena, as the worldwide prevalence of diabetes continues to increase dramatically.

The fact that basic science research findings in diabetology have effected little behavioral change in the U.S. population speaks to the challenges that lie ahead. Perhaps more aggressive public health and educational stances are warranted, instead of or in addition to the clinical posture ordered by the doctor. Several things are incontestable, however, those being that nearly 27% of persons over the age of 65 have diabetes, with one in three U.S. adults projected to have diabetes by the year 2050, and an estimated cost of diagnosed diabetes in the U.S. of $174 billion in 2007. Never mind the so-called fiscal cliff, all signs point to an "actuarial abyss!"

Implementation of sound preventive public policies and fiscal deterrents directed at dietary trans fat, high-calorie, high-fat foods in restaurants and school cafeterias, and sugar-sweetened beverages may be a logical first step, but constitutional freedoms and a strategic retreat from a perceived march toward socialism may pose obstacles every bit as insurmountable as enactment of assault weapon legislation. Lifestyle modification, research into stem cell transformation into insulin-producing cells, identification of diabetes-susceptibility genes, and new drug targets for an army of medications already in the pharmaceutical research and development pipeline continue to garner public interest and clinical enthusiasm, but the yellow snow will remain ever so sweet until collective consciousness makes a lifestyle change for all seasons.

Discussion spotlights growing up in a warzone

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

Jessica L. Powers, an El Paso native and editor of That Mad Game: Growing Up in a Warzone, an anthology of essays from around the world, will be joined by community activists Fito Avitia, Xiaomei Lucas, and writer Becky Cerling Powers to discuss what it is like to be a child in a warzone.

The guest panelists will read excerpts from personal and narrative essays from the anthology, beginning at 2 p.m., Saturday, January 5, at the History museum (510 North Santa Fe Street).

The panel of community activists and writers will also discuss their personal experiences with war and its effects on children, as part of the Spotlight on History symposium sponsored by the El Paso Museum of History.

The discussion will focus on Juarez, Mexico, the Vietnam War, South Africa, World War II, and China's Cultural Revolution. The panel members will bring to the forefront their experiences and the legacy of war through generations, as well as present narratives of children's experiences with war.

What a year 2012 was for sports. Every season brings stories that will last forever in the minds of sports enthusiasts. The year was marked by both feel-good and shamefully unpleasant acts by worldwide sports personnel. Some of the stories that stood out last year included the New Orleans Saints bounty-gate scandal. It turned out that everyone accused in the pay-for-pain program was forgiven of any further penalties. But they had missed games that they will never be able to make up. And the perennial playoff team paid dearly for it. Another great story was the return to prominence of the Notre Dame football program. Even haters of the Irish had to be impressed with this team's resolve and courage. Nothing was expected of them at the beginning of the season but they were certainly the talk of college football at the end.

I'm not a hockey fan by any means but I do feel for the hockey fans that have gone without their sport because of the strike. In this economy – if you have a job that pays extremely well for playing a game – I probably wouldn't complain too much. And c'mon now, be honest, was anybody really surprised about what happened to Lance Armstrong? Apparently, the world's most talented cyclist (because if everybody was doping and he won all the races, then he was the best) did compete with the help of a foreign substance like all of his competitors. I still commend him for all he did and all the money he raised for cancer sufferers. On the more comical side of sports we go to the failed NFL experiment we simply refer to as replacement refs. During the early part of the season the NFL games quickly deteriorated into USFL or XFL territory with replacement officials trying desperately to keep up with the speed of the professional game. They couldn't and the NFL administrators finally brought the real refs back. And quite frankly, they haven't performed much better than their replacements.

We all know that the NBA big wigs couldn't bear to have a weak Los Angeles Lakers team on their hands so they must have been giddy when Dwight Howard and Steve Nash signed with the team. Of course things haven't gone as expected so far and it's rather apparent they won't come close to the 70 wins some sports broadcasters predicted they'd win. The year will also be known as the don't-count-your-chickens Olympic games, where many prognosticators said that Usain Bolt and Michael Phelps had seen better days. As we all learned they are still the world's best at their craft and I think sports fans loved every minute. The NBA loves to push their star players and one star that hadn't reached his potential was LeBron James. Oh, he was considered the best player in the world, but without a championship they said he couldn't be compared to Jordan, Magic or Bird. Of course Bron Bron finally broke through and won his title with the Miami Heat in 2012. And it looks like 2013 could be an encore. Early in 2012, talk around the NFL centered on head trauma on the heels of Junior Seau's suicide. What made his death so shocking is that many sports fans considered him a rock. He was always in charge of his faculties and seemed like one of the most "together" guys in the world of sports. Sports worship was alive and well in 2012, especially with two players who were experiencing the time of their lives. Linsanity and Tebowmania swept through the sports world with the emergence of a little-known Harvard graduate point guard Jeremy Lin and a well-known overachieving Heisman trophy-winning quarterback Tim Tebow. The biggest story of the year was also the most troubling. Penn State had always been considered one of the cleanest football programs in the country for many years. And it all came crumbling down with the Jerry Sandusky sexual-abuse scandal and the resulting cover-up, which included the upper echelon of the school's athletic department as well as famed head coach Joe Paterno. Those were just a few of the bigger stories in 2012. There's no doubt that 2013 will feature stories just as intriguing, inspiring and unappealing. But that's why we watch sports – right?

A sporting view By Mark Vasto

Agree to disagree

I make the same mistake every year around this time: I paint myself into a corner with these annual "best of" or "biggest stories" lists from the year previous. I got the ball rolling last week by mentioning the Marquez-Pacquiao fight and the Giants' improbable Super Bowl run. This week, after much reflecting, soul searching and too much port and lively conversation after holiday dinners, I decided to speed up the process and free myself from the constraints of a top 10 list and throw a bunch of stuff at you, dear reader. The athlete of the year for most sportspublications is Michael Phelps, U.S. Olympic swimmer. True, his career body of work is likely to be unmatched anytime soon, and he's certainly worthy of mention. Usain Bolt would be another fine choice. But for me, Serena Williams is the better choice. Frankly, she might be the greatest female athlete of all time... no doubt that she is the best women's tennis player of all time. She lost one match last year, won three Grand Slam titles and two Olympic Gold medals. Frankly, that may just be the best year any athlete put together... ever. This year, should she win the Australian Open, she will become the oldest woman to ever hold the world's No. 1 ranking, and really, she easily could dominate the sport for another three or more years. Then there were the scandals. The fall of Penn State was one of the most stunning things I've ever seen. A child molestation coverup by Jerry Sandusky led to the firing of one-time legend Joe Paterno, who died suddenly a few months later. It was surreal. Then, after Tiger Woods won his first PGA tournament since his public disgrace, he handed over his honorary title to Lance Armstrong. Armstrong was accused of drugging and doping his way to all of those Tour de France victories and was stripped of all his titles, dropped by all of his sponsors and forced to resign from his cancer foundation. My thinking has evolved on this matter, and the credit goes to the doctors and pharmacists in my family (and the aforementioned port). The fact is, Armstrong didn't fail a drug test. What we believe might have happened – that he gamed the system and intimidated his teammates – really shouldn't trump that fact, either. The rules say he must pass a drug test, and he did. If I'm an employer, and I make somebody submit to random drug tests and they pass, that doesn't mean I could fire him or her because someone said they smoked a joint. They passed the test. After that, it's about honesty and morals. It's not as if Armstrong was flying passenger jets on LSD. He rode bikes up steep terrain for the Postal Service. Either way, these things are always worth the debate. More next week...

King's vision of public service and non-violent social change once again to the forefront of the American conscience. Since then the Corporation for National and Community Service in partnership with the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Non-violent Social Change, and communities across the country, have worked to make the King Holiday a day on, instead of a day off. The idea is to encourage people to volunteer on the third Monday in January to help make their communities a better place to live by serving others much as Dr. King did throughout his life. There will be many projects across American that will be held to help make Dr. King's dream a reality. Starting on Friday, January 4, there will be dozens of drop-off sites throughout the city where individuals can place their donations. On Monday, January 21, the food will be collected and sent to a warehouse where it will be sorted by hundreds of volunteers and distributed among several beneficiaries including the Salvation Army, the Opportunity Center for the Homeless, the El Paso Rescue Mission, the Center Against Family Violence and others. Your good health By Paul G. Donahue, M.D.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I read your column all the time, and I was wondering if anyone has ever written to ask a question about burning in the throat. I was a smoker for years. It's been five months since I have had a cigarette. This throat burning occurs when I walk or try to exercise or even carry laundry. I would like to know what it means. It feels like hot ice in my throat. — F.R.

life? I worry about addiction and what it might be doing to her brain. — N.M.

Antidepressants are not addicting. They don't damage the brain. What they do is restore normal brain chemistry. An imbalance in brain messenger chemicals is believed to lead to depression.

Your daughter's doctor will tell her when she can stop taking the medicine. If a person relapses into another depression after stopping medicine, then she should take antidepressants for a more prolonged period, possibly for life.

I don't want to alarm you, but I will breathe more easily if you see a doctor very soon. What you describe could be a sign of angina, pain caused by the narrowing of a heart artery or arteries.

More often, people describe angina as chest tightness or discomfort that occurs when they're active, as in walking, exercising or carrying laundry, and then lets up when they stop. The variations on angina pain are many. It can be felt as jaw pain, shoulder and arm pain (on the left more often than the right) or neck pain. People use words like "squeezing," "crushing" or "suffocating." Some say it feels like throat tightness. Burning throat pain could be another variant of angina.

Do see a doctor quickly. Stop doing things that bring on this pain until you do.

The booklet on angina and coronary artery disease explains this common malady and how it's treated. Readers can obtain a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue — No. 101W, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Canada with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I think my husband is an alcoholic. He's not abusive, but his consumption of alcohol is more than a six-pack of beer a day, and sometimes whiskey. He usually falls asleep in a chair. My sister tells me the cage test can diagnose alcoholism. What is it, and where can he get it done? He won't talk about these things to me. — C.L.

It's not a lab test. It's four questions. They are: 1) Have you ever felt the need to Cut down on your drinking? 2) Are you Annoyed when people criticize your drinking? 3) Do you ever feel Guilty about your drinking? 4) Have you ever taken a drink first thing in the morning as an Eye-opener?

Two "yes" answers indicate alcoholism. It's a simple but reliable test.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. (c) 2012 North America Synd., Inc. All Rights Reserved.

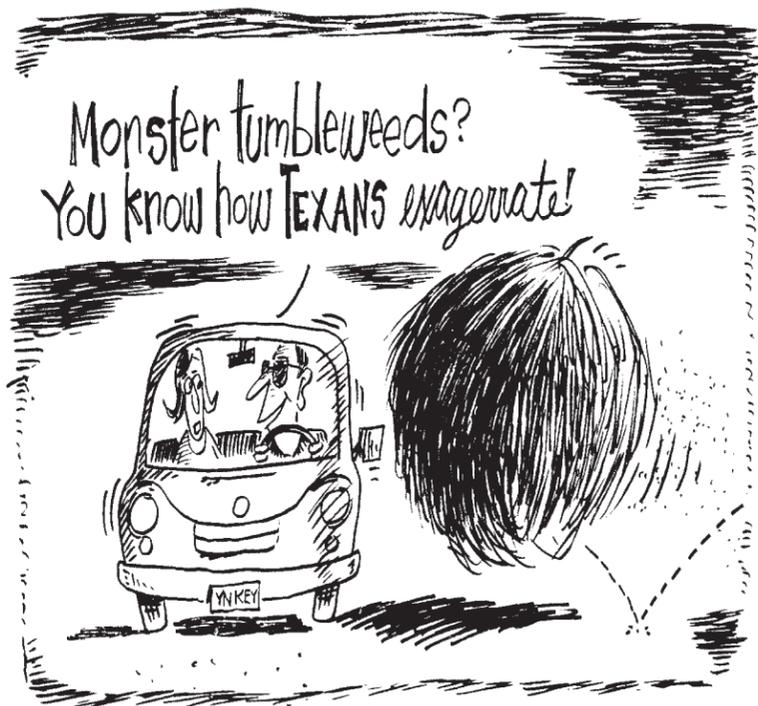

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My daughter is on Effexor for depression. She's been on it for six months, and actually is doing quite well. She's able to handle her job and take care of her family. Does she take this medicine for

Social Security Q&A By Ray Vigil

Q: I'm trying to decide when to retire. Can Social Security help?

A: The best place to start is with a visit to the online Social Security Statement. The Statement provides you with estimates of benefits for you and your family as well as your earnings record and information you should consider about retirement and retirement planning. Find out more about the Statement — and get yours — at www.socialsecurity.gov/mystatement. There "right" time to retire is different for everyone and depends on your individual situation. To help you make your own decision, we offer an online fact sheet with some of the factors to consider at www.socialsecurity.gov/pubs/10147.html.

Q: Do disabled children qualify for disability benefits?

A: There are two Social Security disability programs that provide benefits for disabled children. Under the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) program, a child from birth to age 18 may receive monthly payments based on disability or blindness if:

- The child has an impairment or combination of impairments that meets the definition of disability for children; and
- The income and resources of the parents and the child are within the allowed limits.

Under Social Security, an adult child (a person age 18 or older) may receive monthly benefits based on disability or blindness if:

- The adult child has an impairment or combination of impairments that meet the definition of disability for adults;
 - The disability began before age 22; and
 - A parent of the adult child worked long enough to be insured under Social Security and is receiving retirement or disability benefits, or is deceased.
- Under both of these programs, the child must not be doing any substantial work. The child also must have a medical condition that is expected to last at least one year or result in death. Learn more at www.socialsecurity.gov/applyfordisability.

Q: I've decided I want to retire. Now what do I do?

A: The fastest and easiest way to apply for retirement benefits is to go to www.socialsecurity.gov/online services. Use our online application to apply for Social Security retirement or spouses benefits. To do so, you must:

- Be at least 61 years and 9 months old;
- Want to start your benefits in the next four months; and
- Live in the United States or one of its commonwealths or territories.

For more information on any of the questions listed above, visit our website at www.socialsecurity.gov or call us at 1-800-772-1213. If you have any questions that you would like to have answered, please mail them to the Social Security Office, 1111 Gateway West, Attn: Ray Vigil, El Paso, Texas 79935.

STRANGE BUT TRUE By Samantha Weaver

- It was American humorist and columnist Josh Billings who made the following sage observation: "Reason often makes mistakes, but conscience never does."

- You think there are a lot of lawsuits being heard in the courts these days? Statistics show that half of the suits filed never even make it to court.

- In France in the 1700s, capital punishment was not uncommon, and criminals thus condemned were decapitated by the country's Chief Executioner. This position was hereditary, which posed a problem when, in 1726, the holder of that title, Charles-Jean-Baptiste Sanson, suffered an early death, leaving his 7-year-old son, Charles, to take up the grisly duties. It was obvious to all that a child could never wield the heavy axe required for the decapitations, so it was deemed acceptable for a helper to actually perform the executions. Only the official office-holder could put the official seal on the act, however, so the poor boy had to witness every one. It wasn't until the ripe old age of 12 that he began to take over the full duties of the office.

- When famed inventor Alexander Graham Bell died in 1922, he was dictating a memo. His final words were, "So little done, so much to do!"

- If you're a fan of big brass, you might want to head to Millersville, Pa., in May. Every year during that month, the town celebrates International Tuba Day, with some 50 tuba players on hand to serenade the crowd.

- There's been much public conversation about the growing girth of Americans in recent decades. It's not just people who are gaining weight, though; between 1996 and 2006, the average motor vehicle made in the U.S. gained 500 pounds.

Thought for the Day: "If you obey all the rules, you miss all the fun."

Unscramble these twelve letter strings to form each into an ordinary word (ex. HAGNEC becomes CHANGE). Prepare to use only ONE word from any marked (♥) letter string as each unscrambles into more than one word (ex. ♥RATHE becomes HATER or EARTH or HEART). Fit each string's word either across or down to knot all twelve strings together.
