Costly accidents

A treasure trove of precious metals fell out of the cargo hold of a Russian plane as it took off at an airport near the Siberian town of Yakutsk this earlier year. Millions of dollars worth of gold, platinum and diamonds were spread over a 16-mile path before the plane could return to the airport, according to the Association of Mature American Citizens. Officials said that the original cargo was worth $378 million and that the plane's cargo ramp was damaged on takeoff. Meanwhile, sanitation workers in Hall County, GA discovered some $100,000 worth of jewelry that had apparently been accidentally thrown out with the trash by an unidentified woman who wasted no time in calling the authorities when she discovered her loss.

New VA clinics part of expanded services

By Alfredo Vasquez
Special to the Courier

EL PASO COUNTY – El Paso's Veterans Affairs (VA) Health Care System broke ground recently on a new VA wellness center that will be part of the Medical Center of the Americas (MCA) campus in South-Central El Paso. The campus is located off Interstate-10 near the Reynolds Street exit.

Construction of the VA wellness center is part of an ongoing effort to improve how the El Paso VA Health Care System provides services to the more than 7,000 veterans in the region, according to VA officials. The new center is one of two new VA medical clinics that are expected to open by the end of 2019.

In addition to the VA wellness center, the VA also is planning to open a West Side clinic in the Northwest Corporate Center industrial park by the end of next year.

Officials with the VA health care system, the Medical Center of the Americas Foundation, and U.S. Representative Beto O'Rourke, who represents the district, gathered near Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center El Paso in August to mark the start of construction on the $16 million mental health clinic.

The new 33,000 square-foot center will be near the MCA Foundation's Cardwell Collaborative biomedical technology incubator building. The MCA Foundation won the bid to build the new medical buildings and will lease them to the VA for 20 years. The new clinic's facilities are being constructed by private contractors.

Emma Schwartz, MCA Foundation president, stated that the new clinic at the MCA campus will have more than 160 employees including psychiatrists, psychologists and nurse practitioners. The clinic will primarily offer mental health care, but some primary care services will be available as well, she stated.

General programs to be offered at the clinic consist of general mental health, psychological assessments; individual, family, couples, and group therapy; evidence-based psychotherapy; PTSD/depression/anxiety and other disorder programs; and medication evaluation and management.

Specialty programs that the new clinic plans to offer are: monitored treatment program; substance use disorders program; and post-traumatic stress disorder. More than 160 professionals are expected to staff the new clinic including psychiatrists, tele-psychiatrists, psychologists, tele-psychologists, peer specialists, additional therapists, social workers, and medical residents from Texas Tech Health Sciences Center El Paso.

The new clinic was first proposed in 2015 as part of a pilot program introduced

The new wave of socialism is troublesome for mainstream Democrats

(Publisher's note: The underlined portions are clickable links in the online pdf.)

Americans who identify themselves as Democrats are embracing Socialism at an alarming rate, according to a new survey. And, mainstream Democrats are concerned. They fear the scourge of socialism may stymie their efforts to win at least some measure of control in Congress come November.

Gallup just released the results of the poll showing that Democrats have a more positive image of socialism than they do of capitalism. Fifty-seven percent say they view socialism in a more positive light than they view capitalism while just 47% say they favor capitalism.

"The popularity of socialism in the U.S. has never been greater than it is today. Look at what happened in the Bronx. Upstart, 28-year-old socialist Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez beat veteran, 10-term Congressman Joe Crowley (D-NY) in the New York Democratic primary. Since then closet socialists in the Democratic Party have been outing themselves all across the country, much to the delight of the Democratic Socialists of America, a three-and-a-half decades old organization that has lived in relative obscurity till now," says Dan Weber, president of the conservative Association of Mature American Citizens.

The DSA is a club, not a party, but since the upset victory of Ocasio-Cortez on June 26th it is being called "the most visible and organized force in politics for an ideology".

However, as Weber points out, the majority of far-left candidates in Democratic primaries across the country lost to their mainstream contenders. "And, that is what concerns the party."

The vast majority of voters in the country are unlikely to embrace a philosophy that blatantly wants to upend our American way of life. But, the sudden focus on socialism has been disquieting and is particularly alarming for traditional Democrats who are seeking to overturn the Republican Congress in November. The socialist movement is not likely to help them because it is anathema to voters and could have the effect of minimizing Democratic turnout while rallying the Republican base in the midterm elections.

As discredited former Director of the FBI, James Comey, who was a registered Republican until two years ago, put it in a social media post on July 22: "Democrats, please, please don't lose your minds and rush to the socialist left."

Ocasio-Cortez may have stolen the limelight of socialism, but there are plenty of far left candidates running for office this year – probably more than ever before. And, they are making their own headlines.

Three, progressive 30-something women in Pennsylvania, for example, upset candidates with plenty of funding and lots of Democratic clout. Two of the upstarts won in state house primaries against veteran mainstream Democrats. The other, also a first time candidate, beat a state Senate aide, also a first timer, but who had party backing as well as lots of campaign funding. Meanwhile, in Texas – of all places – as many as 20 self-proclaimed socialists are on ballots throughout the state this year. And none of them seem to be bashful about identifying themselves as a socialist.

One of those Texans, Ali Khorasani, who is running for Congress, proudly proclaims his progressive inclinations on his Web site. He also posted an online message that reads: "As a member of both the DSA and the Communist Party of Houston, I am deeply aligned with socialist values and anti-capitalism."

So, where is this leftist activity coming from? One of their own, socialist New York Times OpEd columnist Michelle Goldberg, reveals, in a New York Times opinion article that it's the work of "The Millennial Socialists."

"And, if you haven't figured it out, many of those millennials were indoctrinated in school," says Weber who cites a survey conducted by the Victims of Communism Memorial Foundation.

The organization was created by a unanimous Act of Congress in 1993. It conducts periodic surveys of attitudes toward socialism and communism and its most recent poll found:

- Millennials would prefer to live in a socialist country (44%) than in a capitalist one (42%); and
- Seven percent of those polled said they'd actually prefer to live in a communist country.

In reporting on its survey, the Foundation pointed out that there are more millennials than baby boomers in the U.S. and that they make up what is officially the largest generation in America.

"To a large extent, they received their education in middle school, high school and college from teachers and professors that were liberal, at best," Weber points out. "They helped shape the lives of their students, as they grew old enough to vote."

Jake Zhu was the National News Editor of the Cornell Review in 2015 and wrote an article for the publication with the headline: I Am a Survivor of My Public Schools' Liberal Brainwashing. As he put it, "the greatest threat to my intellectual cultivation throughout my years of attending Boston Public Schools is the prevalence of blatant left-wing indoctrination entrenched in the academic content."

The Association of Mature American Citizens (<https://www.amac.us>) is a vibrant, vital senior advocacy organization that takes its marching orders from its members. We act and speak on their behalf, protecting their interests and offering a practical insight on how to best solve the problems they face today.

Prohibition and 'Medicare for All'

Alvin Lowi, writing in 2008, made a compelling case that Prohibition was never repealed, but rather, that Al Capone and Uncle Sam merely traded places. Without a doubt, brutal consequences await anyone who attempts to skirt the taxes and tribute demanded by the D.C. mob with regard to the sale and distribution of alcohol-containing beverages. This tight control of commerce, from which "juice" is extracted, pervades the medical industry, as well, as the D.C. syndicate currently controls half the sale and distribution of medical commerce in this country. Viewed in this way, it is clear that the "Medicare for All" (Prohibition of Choice) initiative represents a shameless attempt to completely control the funds flowing through this industry, a move that would make even Mr. Capone blush.

Think this is too harsh? That Prohibition made mobsters rich differs in what way from how Obamacare made D.C.'s medical cronies rich? The sad truth is that each and every time a new law is passed and the regulators appear (almost always connected with the industry ostensibly regulated), another chunk of commerce passes through the inefficient and corrupt toll booth of the D.C. "outfit." In addition, industry consolidation predictably materializes with each new law, so fewer and richer "captains" will remain to kiss Uncle Sam's ring.

In the same way that many mob-related terms disguise their true meaning (made, juice, family), the titles chosen for many laws serve as decoys for their intended effect. Just as there was nothing Affordable or related to "care" in the Affordable Care Act, the deceit attached to the phrase "Medicare for All" belies the fact that if enacted, the purchase or sale of medical services outside of this system would necessarily be unlawful, or this gangland attempt to coopt the industry would get nowhere.

And while the purchase of medical services outside of this new system would be prohibited for you and me, rest assured that our "representatives" in D.C. would exempt themselves from this restriction, just as they did with Obamacare and just as they did during Prohibition. President Wilson was given a special exemption for his private wine cellar, FDR was known to keep "stocks of gin, rum, and scotch in a closet of his New York home," and not to be outdone, Congress had its own bootlegger. Remaining true to this tradition and for our own good, the D.C. protection racket managed to remain immune from Social Security taxes until 1984 and continues to have special access to benefits apart from Medicare. Rest assured, "Medicare for All" rationing would not apply to them.

Two of Medicare's flaws deserve special attention, both highlighting the syndicate-like mentality that pervaded

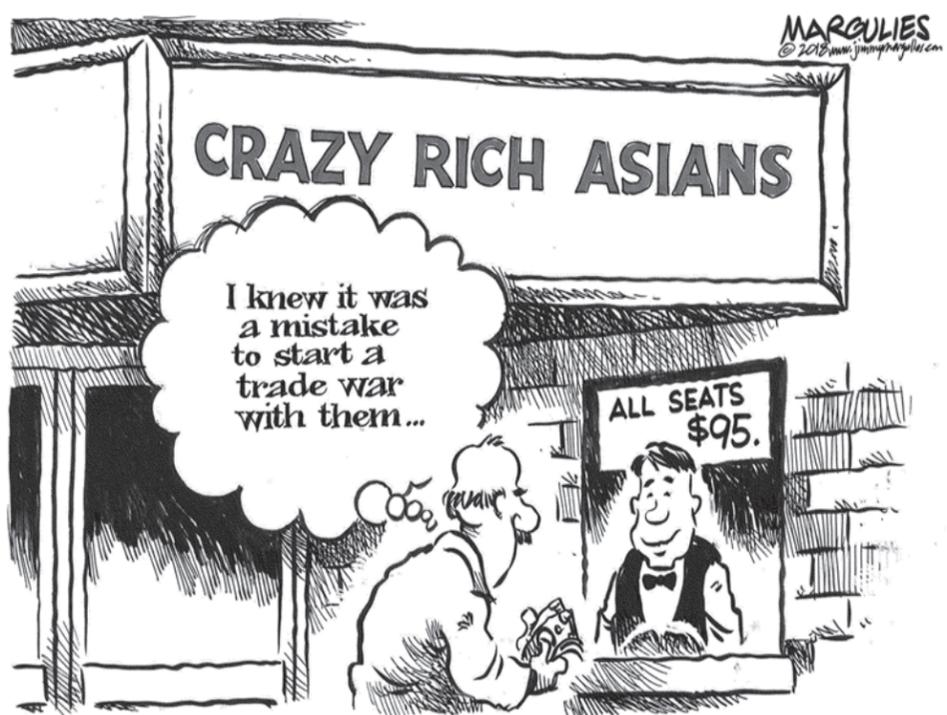

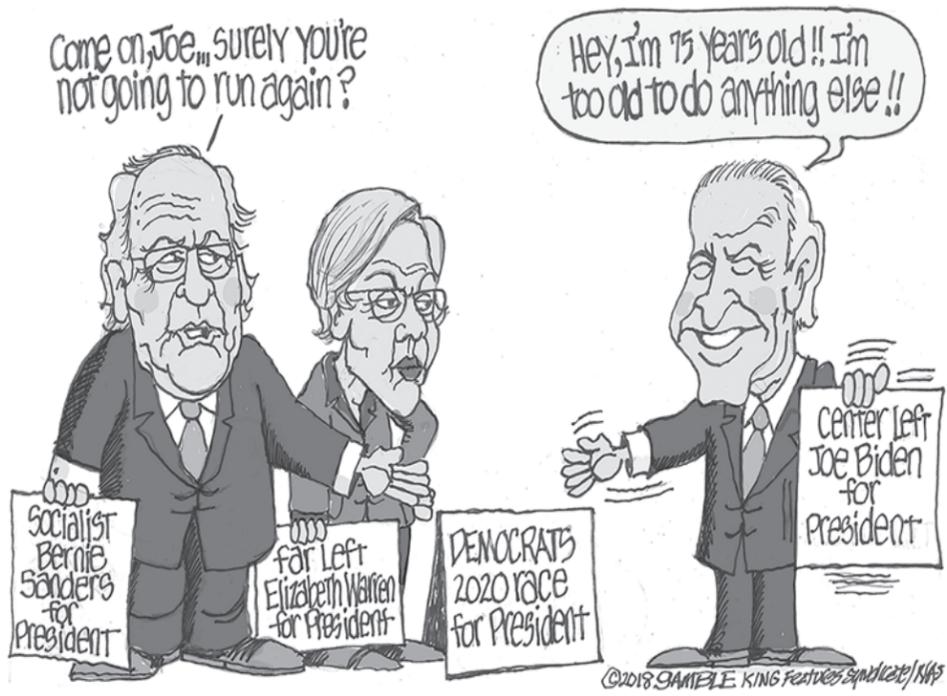

Prohibition days. First, in 1992, Uncle Sam's "outfit" achieved complete control of those doing business with them, when during a Republican administration, the price-dictating Resource Based Relative Value Scale (RBRVS) was inflicted on the industry. It is important to understand that true prices emerge from competitive activity, fluctuating around a market-clearing price. Prices are, after all, signals that connote the presence of surpluses or shortages and serve the purpose of minimizing resource misallocation. Top-down prices, like RBRVS prices are always wrong. They are either too high or too low with predictable results. If doctors or hospitals are paid a very lucrative amount for one service and a paltry amount for another, surpluses and shortages of care will predictably materialize. This "soft rationing" is a powerful budget-balancing tool for government programs like Medicare, which has recently forecast its own bankruptcy by 2026.

Second, the payroll taxes of those currently working are the primary source of revenue benefiting those receiving Medicare's benefits, most of which are no longer working. Charles Ponzi, just like Bernie Madoff, utilized this ploy to lure individuals into their designs, benefitting early investors with funds from newer investors. These schemes, once discovered, disintegrate without the muscle of the government outfit to force future "contributions."

Finally, for those who believe that the D.C. gang has had our best interests in mind, remember that in an effort to enforce Prohibition, the government deliberately poisoned spirits they knew were destined for consumption, resulting in the deaths of thousands of individuals and the blinding of many more. "The welfare of the masses is always the alibi of tyrants," Albert Camus' famous quote, should embolden our skepticism for those who would inflict "Medicare for All" on the rest of us, a scheme that will undoubtedly prove more deadly and tragic than Prohibition at its peak.

It's time for Hardaway to make the NBA Hall of Fame

By Steve Escajeda
Special to the Courier

This year's NBA Hall of Fame class was pretty impressive.

Players like Steve Nash, Jason Kidd, Grant Hill, Ray Allen and Maurice Cheeks led the cavalcade of 14 stars, executives and others associated with the league.

The class of 2020 will be a slam dunk with players like Kobe Bryant, Tim Duncan and Kevin Garnett eligible for the first time.

And I think there will be little doubt that all three will be inducted in their first year of eligibility. I mean you have three of the best players who have ever played the game and in Kobe and Garnett, you have two players who came right out of high school.

But amazingly, the big question is whether any of the guys who are eligible in 2019 will ever get into the hall.

There are a lot of decent names on the list, but there could be a case for all of them not getting into the HOF.

Some of the guys eligible are Shawn Marion and Chauncey Billups and Chris Webber and Ben Wallace and Sidney Moncrief and Kevin Johnson.

There's no doubt that all of them are good players. But the Hall of Fame is something else altogether.

Do any of these guys deserve to be mentioned among the best who ever played the game?

The only name there that probably should be in the hall is Chris Webber. But if he didn't make it I doubt anyone would lose sleep over it – except for Webber.

Another member of that 2019 class is one of the best players ever to wear a UTEP Miners uniform.

Tim Hardaway has been eligible for Hall of Fame for 10 years. The good news is that he keeps getting closer every year.

Hardaway started his NBA career as part of the popular "Run TMC" combo with the Golden State Warriors in 1989.

Of course, Hardaway was the "T" in this combo. The "M" was Mitch Richmond and the "C" was Chris Mullin.

As the point guard, there's no doubt that Hardaway was the catalyst for this high-speed fast-breaking offense that was the most exciting thing in the NBA at the time.

What has to be difficult for Hardaway is that Richmond and Mullin are already in the Hall of Fame.

Heck, even their coach, Don Nelson, is already in the Hall of Fame. His college coach Don Haskins is in the hall.

So Hardaway is hoping that 2019 will be the year that the voters come to their senses and do the right thing.

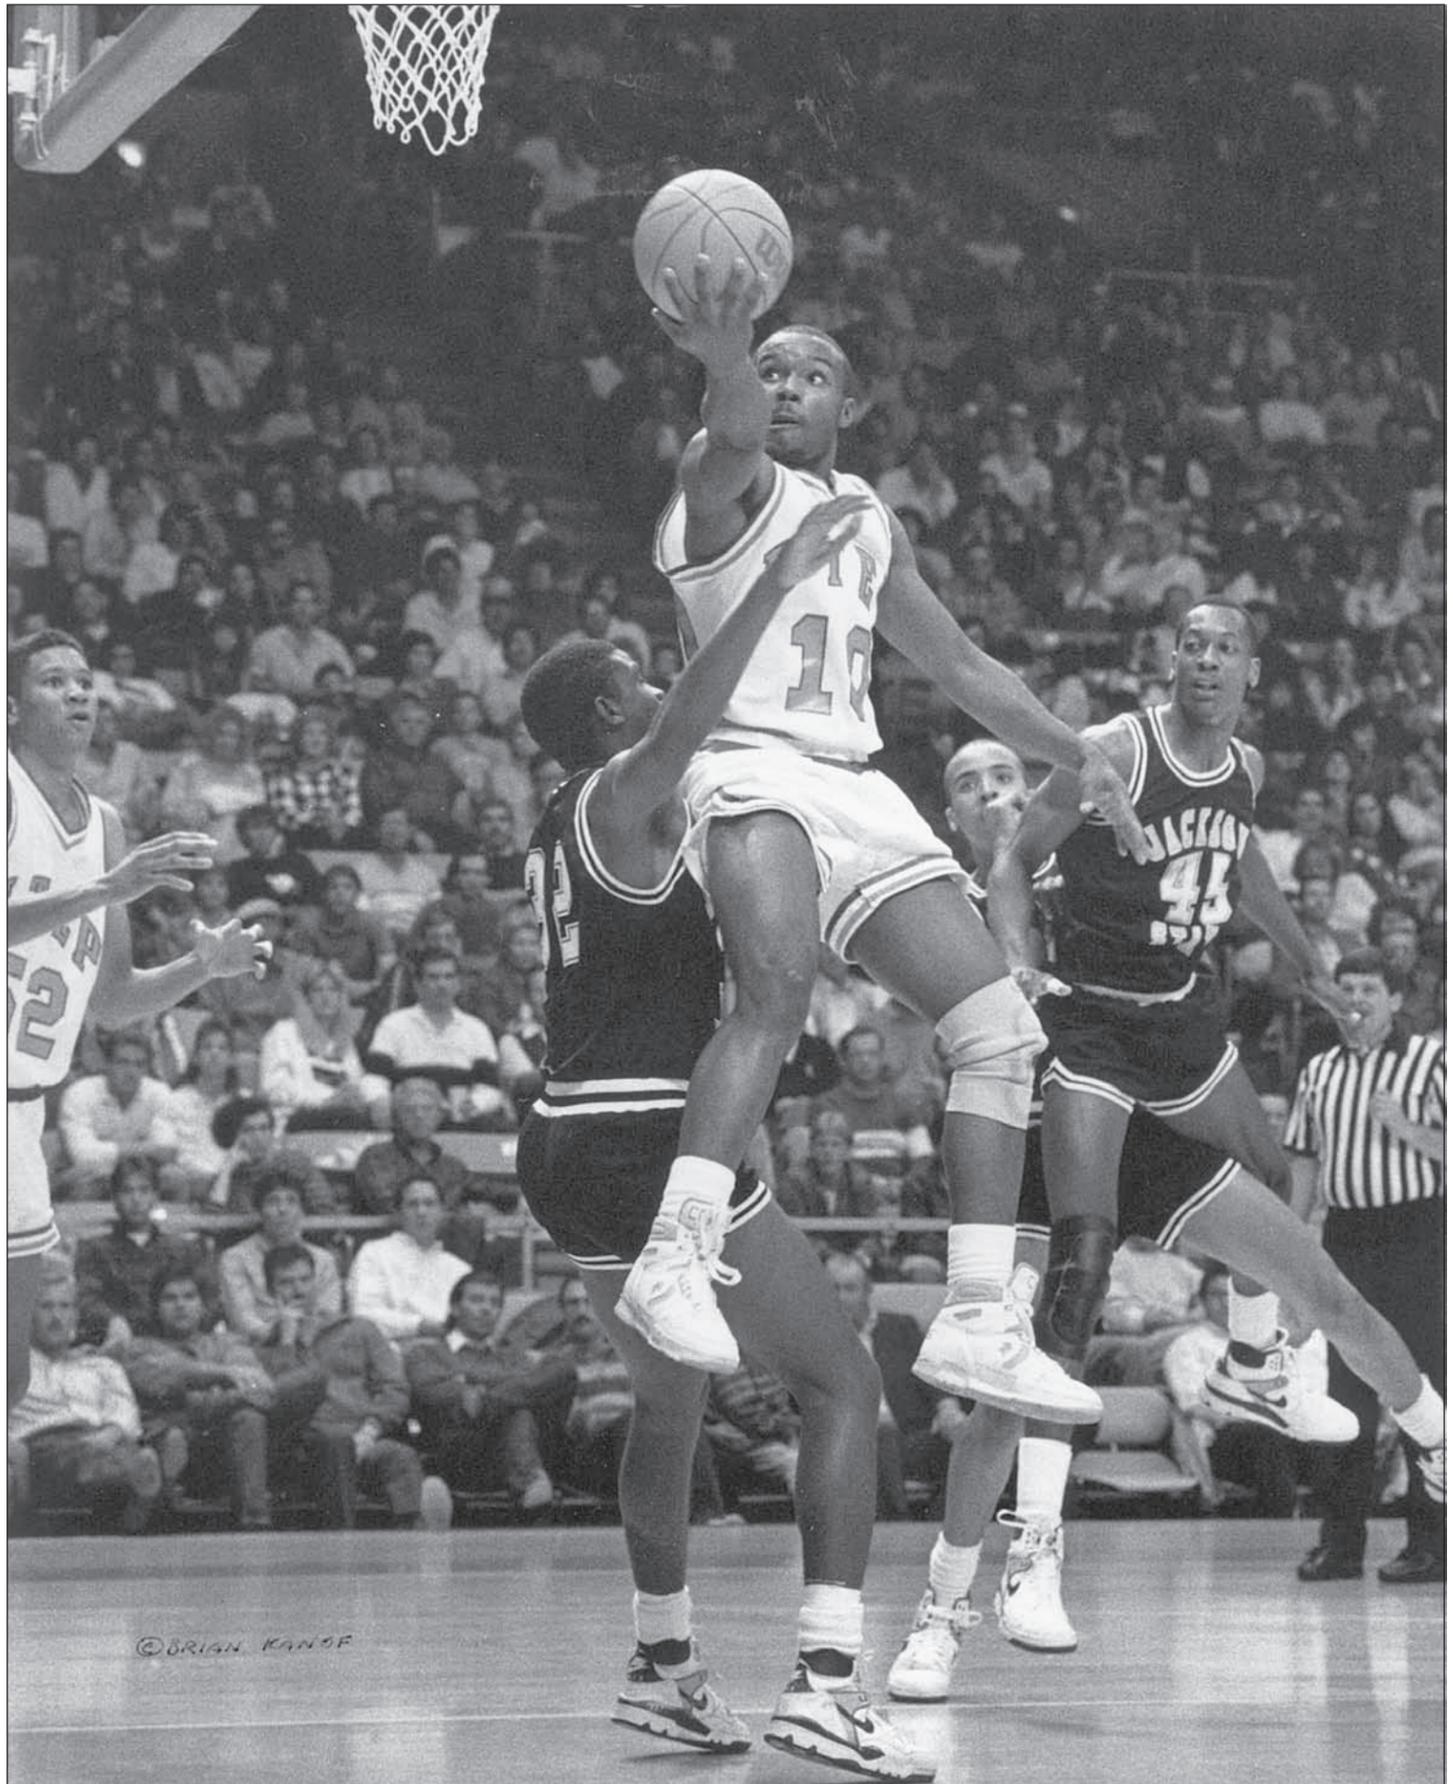

Hardaway played 14 seasons in the NBA, mostly with Golden State and the Miami Heat.

His career scoring average was 17.7 points per game and he averaged 8.2 assists per game. Injuries at the end of his career limited him to 867 total games played.

Hardaway was a five-time All-Star and was named to the All-NBA team five times.

Many times Hall of Famers aren't solely judged on their numbers, or championships, but also on their timing.

Was that player the best in the league at his position for a certain amount of time? And Hardaway was certainly among the best point guards in the NBA for a decade.

SOARING – Tim Hardaway flies right over a Jackson State defender in an undated game while playing for UTEP.

He led the Miami Heat, along with Alonzo Mourning, to the playoffs for six straight years in the late 1990s. He advanced to the playoffs nine years and at the age of 31, averaged over 26 points in the playoffs in 1998 for the Heat.

It would be a travesty for Tim Hardaway not to be voted into the Hall of Fame. And I don't just say that as a UTEP fan, but as a fan of great basketball.

The "UTEP two-step" was the name given to his crossover dribble that broke the ankles of many an NBA defender.

In fact, it was Hardaway who first made the crossover dribble famous. I mean c'mon, when an NBA move is named after you that's got to get you into the HOF.

It seems like Hardaway made a career of making everybody around him a better player.

Let's just hope he didn't pass his Hall of Fame credentials to everyone else.

by O'Rourke to reform the system to prioritize care for service-related conditions and promote partnerships between the VA and local health care providers.

The program, developed by O'Rourke and local health providers, sought to address the El Paso VA Health Care System's long wait times, which have been ranked among the longest in the country.

The average wait time for an appointment varies by location and specialty. Over the past month, the average wait time for a new, primary-care patient to get an appointment at the main VA Medical Center in El Paso was 23 days, according to the VA's website.

O'Rourke stated that the system has made progress in hiring more mental-health providers and establishing relationships with community members, but the lack of space at existing facilities remains a challenge.

"One of my most significant challenges since I arrived has been space limitations," retired Army Col. Michael Amaral, director of the El Paso VA Health Care System, said during the ground-breaking ceremony. "This physical limitation has made it extremely challenging to expand needed services, not only within the area of mental health, but other services as well."

The VA plans to move most of its mental health services from its main medical center, located next to William Beaumont Army Medical Center, to the new MCA wellness center, open a West Side clinic in a new building in the Northwest Corporate Center industrial park, and move its administrative offices to two renovated historic buildings inside Fort Bliss by the end of next year, according to Amaral.

The El Paso VA Health Care System, which includes a Las Cruces clinic, employs about 900 workers, including about 850 at its main medical center, and has an annual budget of $260 million. The El Paso system handled more than 31,000 patients with more than 300,000 visits in 2017, according to VA officials.

"The new clinics are not only a great way for El Paso to address outstanding mental health care needs for veterans, but it's a great way for El Paso to provide an example for the country as to how to work with limited resources to make sure we're delivering care for our veterans," O'Rourke stated.

Try baking soda for underarm odor

DEAR DR. ROACH: I am a 77-year-old female. I had a left-breast lumpectomy (with some lymph nodes removed) about 15 years ago, leaving me with a much heavier right breast. I don't know whether this plays an important role with my problem. Since the surgery, I have had a problem controlling underarm odor. I do not use any aluminum-based products. I have tried vinegar, milk of magnesia and a deodorant made from milk of magnesia. Within a matter of just a few hours, I notice quite an odor, particularly in my right armpit, which gets worse as the day goes on. I do not perspire profusely, but do develop some underarm moisture. Can you think of any reason this is happening, or any remedy that might work for me? I would appreciate your comments. -- D.M.M.

I would start by trying a non-antiperspirant deodorant. These are not aluminum-based and work well for most people.

If the deodorant doesn't work, you should consider another old-fashioned remedy that you haven't tried: baking soda. It changes the pH of the armpit and helps to keep it dry, and both of those things help get rid of odor.

Underarm odor is caused by bacteria that live on our skin; the sweat itself is odorless. Thus, if you get rid of the bacteria, you can get rid of the odor. I have prescribed topical antibiotics on occasion. Some people have told me that an alcohol-based hand-sanitizing gel helps. It might be that it dries out the skin and also kills bacteria. I would be cautious about overusing this as a solution. The underarm is a sensitive area that can get irritated.

I'd be happy to hear from readers about other solutions for this common problem, and I will report back on the most successful methods.

DEAR DR. ROACH: I have severe halitosis. I have had my sinuses, teeth and gums checked to see if they are the cause of the odor, but the dentist and ENT found nothing. I was referred by my primary doctor to a G.I. specialist, who found I had a sliding hiatal hernia, which was causing acid reflux. He recommended surgery to push the stomach back into its normal position below the diaphragm. I decided to pass on the surgery. He recommended taking over-the-counter medications such as Nexium, but after several days my lower back started to hurt, so I stopped taking them. I am reconsidering the surgery and was wondering if this is a good idea. Is it possible that the hernia has nothing to do with the halitosis? -- E.H.

Experts believe that 90 percent of the time, halitosis comes from the mouth. What your gastroenterologist is suggesting as the cause of the halitosis is plausible. I found several anecdotal cases where surgery cured the halitosis. However, it's not only possible that the hiatal hernia has nothing to do with the halitosis, I think it is unlikely that it does. Since surgery would not otherwise be recommended for a sliding hiatal hernia, I can't recommend surgery.

VA grants boost adaptive sports

by Freddy Groves

An estimated 10,000 disabled veterans can still benefit from the $8 million in grants that the Department of Veterans Affairs awarded to sports programs for 2018. Groups in all 50 received a cut of the money to use in planning, managing and implementing their programs.

These programs range from city and regional sports, community groups, and parks and rec to sports clinics, wheelchair games and golf tournaments... even to preparation for Paralympic competition.

Here are just a few of the sports the grants have covered: triathlon, table tennis, basketball, rowing, martial arts, swimming, rafting, wheelchair rugby, archery, judo, climbing, fishing, soccer, powerlifting and slalom. This year the grants covered events in both summer (kayaking, surfing, sailing) and winter (skiing, curling, hockey), sports clinics, Golden Age games (seniors over age 55), bowling, shooting and cycling, a creative arts festival and wheelchair games. The programs offered get bigger every year.

Interested in participating? For one thing, it's a lot of fun, and you'll meet others with the same challenges, goals and determination. If you think you're not quite up to it yet, talk to your clinical team about what you can do to get ready to participate in adaptive programs.

And just so you know... a new study of adaptive sports found that benefits included increased employment, self-confidence and a peer-education system. Add in independence, reduced need for pain and depression medication and fewer secondary medical conditions, and it's worth checking out.

To learn more, go online to www.va.gov/adaptivesports. If you'll be training at the Paralympic level, there is a monthly stipend to help with expenses, if you qualify. Check the website for details.

Unscramble these twelve letter strings to form each into an ordinary word (ex. HAGNEC becomes CHANGE). Prepare to use only ONE word from any marked (♥) letter string as each unscrambles into more than one word (ex. ♥ RATHE becomes HATER or EARTH or HEART). Fit each string's word either across or down to knot all twelve strings together.

• Use Lego people to hold your charging cables when not in use. Their hands are the perfect size to hold cords, and you can stick the figures to a small Lego base that's secured to whatever is convenient – a table edge, your night stand or even the wall itself – with some double-faced tape.

• "New shoes too tight? Wear a pair of thick socks, and slip your shoes on. Run a hair dryer over the areas where it's too tight, and the heat will help those spots expand. Test in an inconspicuous area first if you are unsure that the fabric can take the heat!"

• Got your cellphone wet? Try the rice trick first. Power down if possible and remove the protective cover, then fill a zipper-top plastic baggie with plain uncooked rice. Insert your phone and seal the bag, making sure that all parts of the phone are surrounded by the rice. Let it sit for 12 hours so the rice can draw the moisture from your device. Then try to power up.

• "Want to seal your sugar bag (or any all-plastic bag)?" Fold over the top at least an inch, and cover the fold with a strip of aluminum foil – both sides. Lay the bag on its side. Iron the fold, which is trapped inside the foil. It melts the plastic inside. Let cool and remove the foil."
